NOTE TO LIBRARIANS

Although this book—distributed free to libraries and individuals—is primarily a Holocaust memorial for a small Latvian town, its novel methodology for recovering victims' names has attracted considerable interest by Holocaust historians. Preliminary results of this study have been reported at two international conferences[1,2], a detailed account of the methodology is being written for a peer-reviewed journal[3], and at least one research project based on this methodology is in advanced planning stages. The complete database is available on the Internet at <http://www.ej-anders.com>, but the present book nonetheless may have some reference value.

For most Western European countries, it has been easy to recover the names of Holocaust victims, as complete deportation lists generally exist. However, in Eastern and Central European countries, nearly all deportation and execution lists have vanished. Past efforts to recover the names from these countries have relied mainly on survivors' reports, but this approach, though energetically pursued by Yad Vashem since the 1950s, has yielded only one-half of the 6 million names. For countries such as Latvia, where the survival fraction was very small (~2%), the yield was correspondingly smaller, about 20%.

The approach in the present study has been to search archival records, such as census data, residents' lists, phone and business directories, etc. Coverage of victims' names for the town of Liepāja thus has increased from 20% to more than 95%, and for most victims, accurate personal data have been obtained that can serve as a basis for sociological or genealogical studies.

PREFACE

This book is dedicated to the victims who perished in the dunes of Šķēde, in the camps of Hitler and Stalin, at the front, and in the countless killing grounds of World War II. It is also dedicated to the survivors, who endured unspeakable hardships.

For those readers who did not experience World War II, here is a brief outline of the events that destroyed the Jewish community of Liepāja, Latvia in 1941–45.

The USSR had occupied independent Latvia on 17 June 41 and annexed it a few weeks later. Transformation to the Soviet "paradise" was swift. Property—even small shops and houses—was confiscated, savings were wiped out overnight, and housing was restricted to 9 m^2 per person, to make room for hordes of Soviet officers and bureaucrats. Arrests mounted. Though the victims were mainly nationalists and wealthy people, they also included farmers and workers, true to Stalin's maxim that terror must be blind and unpredictable. The arrest wave climaxed on 14 June 41, when about 14,000 people from all over Latvia, including ~1,800 Jews, were deported to Siberia.

This deportation was only the first calamity to strike the Jews of Latvia, as illustrated by events in the port city of Liepāja. Of the ~7,140[1] Jews who lived there on 14 June 1941, some 200 were deported to the USSR that day, another ~200 fled to the USSR after the German attack of 22 June 1941, and most of the remaining ones were killed in the months after German forces captured the town on 29 June 1941. Most men were shot during the summer and fall; at first near the lighthouse, then on the Naval Base, and finally in the dunes of Šķēde north of town. Women and children were largely spared until the big Aktion of 14–17 December, 1941, when 2,749 Jews were shot. Killings continued in early 1942, and by the time the ghetto was established on 1 July 1942, only 832 Jews remained.

The ghetto was closed on 8 October 1943 and the ~800 survivors were taken to Riga. Young adults were initially spared, but in the next few months older people and women with children were killed locally or sent to Auschwitz for gassing. When the Red Army approached Riga in the summer of 1944, the survivors were sent to the Stutthof concentration camp near Danzig in several transports, from August to October 1944. Many died in the increasingly brutal conditions of that camp, especially on death marches in early 1945, and barely 200 survived. Those camp survivors who returned to Latvia received a chilly welcome from the Soviets, who accused them of having worked for the enemy. Some were sent to the Gulag: either right away or in 1949–53, after the alleged plot by Jewish doctors to poison Stalin. Others got by with shorter spells of forced labor.

The deportees and refugees in the USSR fared a little better, as only one-third of them perished. Refugees began to return to Latvia in 1944, but deportees only in 1956–58, after Stalin's death.

All we can do for the victims is to honor their memory (the Talmud says that one is truly dead only when all memory of one's existence is lost). I have a personal interest in the matter, being a Liepāja Holocaust survivor myself. [My name was Alperovitch; my grandfather Israel (1864–1934) was gabbai of the main synagogue]. Thus I was shocked to discover in 1998 that most of the 6,500+ Liepāja Jews killed in WWII had become nameless statistics. Although Yad Vashem since the 1950's had urged survivors to submit victims' names, only a small fraction of the names of Latvian Jews had been so reported. The reason was obvious: as only ~2% of the Latvian Jews caught by the German attack of 22 June 1941 had survived, many Liepāja Jewish families and their friends were totally annihilated in the Holocaust, leaving nobody to remember their names. Such oblivion would have pleased Hitler.

Actually a solution was at hand. In a genealogical report on my family, A. Feigmanis had mentioned "a census of Libau drawn up by Nazis on August 30, 1941". Here, evidently, was a major source of names. The historian Andrew Ezergailis suggested some other lists that might be in the Latvian State Historical Archives, and so the plan was obvious: recover the names from archive documents, complementing the sparse accounts from survivors.

I was unable to persuade a survivors' organization to help organize the project, and therefore did it myself. Margers Vestermanis, director of the Museum-Archive "Jews in Latvia", gave valuable advice on document sources and suggested a candidate for the archive work in Riga. This task was soon taken over by Juris Dubrovskis, a 19-year-old student who managed, despite the pressures of his academic work, to record thousands of names in the computer. Thanks to electronic mail and the 10-hr time difference between Riga and California, we were able to shuttle the database back and forth almost daily, enabling me to check and continue Juris' work while he slept.

The August, 1941 census covered only 5,680 of the ~7,140 Jews in Liepāja. We therefore extended our search to all other records we could think of: Yad Vashem, the 1945 Soviet Extraordinary Commission, Stutthof, the International Tracing Service, and 10 others. In the end we had 7,060 names. Nearly all of these people had been killed, but we had direct evidence for only about 3,000. Thus we had to find out who of the remaining ~4,000 were killed. The execution lists have been either destroyed or locked up—for mysterious reasons—in KGB archives. We therefore thought of an indirect method for determining the names of victims: if we had a complete list of survivors, we could infer that anyone not on that list had perished. Thus we devoted a major effort to finding the names of survivors, mainly from other survivors and a 1992 list of Libauers[1]. A full account of the methodology is being published elsewhere.[2]

All these data sources are incomplete, inaccurate, and inconsistent to varying degrees. Particularly the data from Yad Vashem (1,403 people) and the Extraordinary Commission (756 people) often are very sketchy, giving only the surname but no first name, age, or address. Even when first names are given, they tend to be the informal names used by family and friends, not the official, mainly Hebrew, names. Ages, if given at all, are estimates, often in error by 10–20 years. The Stutthof camp records are more detailed, but many prisoners germanized their first names, often beyond recognition, and changed their birth dates to avoid "selection". Although we have made great efforts to match up these fragmentary data, some 360 people remain poorly identified. Perhaps half of them may be duplicates, especially those with common surnames. But we have kept all 360, thinking it better to retain some duplicates than to reject some genuine victims whose only fault is that their names were not properly recorded. Like the Unknown Soldier ("whose name is known but to God"), they symbolize those few hundred victims of whom we have found no trace.

For people who spent the war years in the USSR, coverage also is uneven. The official Latvian list of deportees (182 Jews from Liepāja)[3] is about 90% complete. There also exist lists of Jewish soldiers. But we have not found any lists of refugees who fled to the USSR. Our 210 names for this group were gathered from many sources, mainly survivors.

Unlike most memorial books, this book is somber, focusing mainly on the names of victims and survivors. It omits the usual nostalgic reminiscences about the home town, as such reminiscences for Liepāja have already been published in the 1982 Yizkor book, which is now available on the Internet.[4] Instead, the book opens with two accounts of the Holocaust in Liepāja. The first, by the historian Andrew Ezergailis, is the Liepāja section from Ch. 9 of his book, The Holocaust in Latvia, 1941–44. The second, by the survivor Solomon Feigerson, covers these events from the less detached perspective of a victim. Next follows a list of all 7,060 names, with basic information for each.

There is much more information in our database than we were able to include in this book. We have therefore posted it on the Internet at <http://www.ej-anders.com>. It will be updated from time to time until at least the end of 2002, when it will be transferred to another site, probably the US Holocaust Memorial Museum or Yad Vashem.

Acknowledgments

We are most grateful to Ella Barkan (Tel Aviv), who tirelessly interviewed every survivor she could locate in Israel and obtained information on nearly 400 people. Major assistance to the project was provided by:Paul Berkay (Long Beach), Solomon Feigerson (Rishon Le Zion), Morris Halle (Cambridge, Mass.), and Margers Vestermanis (Riga).

We are indebted to the following people for providing data. Gunta Minde and Ira Zanerība (Latvian State Historical Archives, Rīga, Latvia), Danuta Drywa (Państwowe Muzeum Stutthof w Sztutowie, Sztutowo, Poland), C. C. Biedermann and U. Jost (International Tracing Service, Bad Arolsen, Germany), Alex Avraham and Zvi Bernhardt (Hall of Names, Yad Vashem, Jerusalem), and Vadim Altskan, Benton Arnovitz, Aaron T. Kornblum, and Arnold Kramer (US Holocaust Memorial Museum, Washington, DC). Yves Sandoz (International Committee of the Red Cross, Geneva) kindly provided access to the gigantic database of the International Tracing Service. Mr. Zarwel of the Bundesarchiv, Berlin, helped locate documents from their collection. German Levin (Rīga) recorded data in the early stages of the project.

ПРЕДИСЛОВИЕ

Эта книга посвящается всем тем, кто погиб в дюнах Шкеде, в лагерях Гитлера и Сталина, на фронте и безчисленных местах убийств во время второй мировой войны. А так же тем, кто остался в живых, пережив невероятные трудности.

Для тех читателей, которые не испытали ужасов второй мировой войны, мы предлагаем краткое описание тех событий, которые истребили еврейскую общину города Лиепая, Латвия, в 1941–45 годах.

17 июня 1941 года СССР оккупировала независимую Латвию, присоединив её несколько недель спустя. Перевоплощение в советский «рай» было молниеносным. Вся недвижимая собственность была конфискована, вплоть до маленьких магазинчиков и домов, личные сбережения ликвидированы за ночь, жилая площадь.ограничена до 9 м^2 на человека, чтобы освободить место для полчищ советских офицеров и бюрократов. Аресты множились. Хотя аресты касались главным образом националистов и богатых людей, они затрагивали также крестьян и рабочих, что соответствовало Сталинской максиме – террор должен быть слепым и непредсказуемым. Кульминация волны арестов пришлась на 14 июня 1941 года, когда 14000 человек, включая 1800 евреев, были сосланы в Сибирь.

Высылка была лишь первым событием в ряду бедствий евреев Латвии, что можно проиллюстрировать событиями в портовом городе Лиепая. Из ~7140[1] евреев, которые жили в этом городе 14 июня 1941 года, ~200 были сосланы в СССР, ещё ~200 сбежали в СССР после нападения Германии 22 июня 1941 года, а большинство из оставшихся были убиты в последующие месяцы после захвата города немцами 29 июня 1941 года. Большинство мужчин были расстреляны в течение лета и осени, сперва неподалеку от маяка, потом на морской базе, и, наконец, на севере города—в дюнах Шкеде. Женщин и детей в основном не трогали до большой Акции 14–17 декабря 1941 года, когда расстреляли 2749 евреев. Убийства продолжались до начала 1942 года. К тому времени, когда создали гетто—1 июля 1942 года, осталось только 832 еврея.

Гетто закрыли 8 октября 1943 года, тех, кто остался в живых, перевезли в Ригу. Молодых сначала не трогали. В последующие несколько месяцев старых людей и женщин с детьми убили на месте или сослали в Аушвиц для уничтожения в газовых камерах. Красная Армия подходила к Риге летом 1944 года. С августа по октябрь 1944 года фашисты выслали всех оставшихся в живых в концентрационный лагерь Штутгоф, недалеко от Данцига. Многие погибли в этих лагерях ввиду жесточайших условий, особенно во время маршей смерти, в начале 1945 года. Выжило лишь 200 человек. Вернувшись в Латвию эти измученные люди были холодно встречены Советскими властями, которые обвиняли их в сотрудничестве с врагом. Некоторые были сосланы в Гулаг или сразу, или в 1949–53 гг, во время "дела врачей" (мнимого заговора еврейских врачей с целью отравить Сталина). Другие обошлись коротким периодом принудительного труда.

Депортированным и беженцам в СССР повезло немножко больше, только одна треть из них погибла. Беженцы стали возвращаться в Латвию в 1944 г., но сосланные—только в 1956–58 гг., после смерти Сталина.

Всё, что мы можем сделать для жертв, - это почтить их память (в Талмуде сказано: человек мёртв только тогда, когда потеряна вся память о его существовании). Я лично заинтересован в этом, так как являюсь человеком, спасшимся от смерти во время Холокоста в Лиепае [моя фамилия была Альперович, мой дед Израиль (1861–1934) был габай главной синагоги]. Итак, я был неприятно поражён, обнаружив в 1998 году, что большинство из 6500 евреев города Лиепая, убитых во время второй мировой войны, оказались безымянной статистикой. Хотя в пятидесятые годы Яд Вашем настаивал на том, чтобы все оставшиеся в живых сообщили имена погибших, в списках оказалась только очень маленькая часть имён евреев Латвии. Причина была в том, что из всех евреев Латвии, захваченных немцами 22 июня 1941 года, только 2% осталось в живых. Многие семьи евреев Лиепаи и их друзья были полностью уничтожены во время Холокоста, не оставив в живых никого, кто бы мог помнить их имена. Такое забвение очень понравилось бы Гитлеру.

В действительности выход из положения был. В генеалогическом докладе о моей семье А. Фейгманис упомянул «перепись населения города Лиепая, составленную нацистами 30 августа 1941 года». Разумеется, это был главный и очень важный источник имён. Историк Эндрю Эзергайлис (Andrew Ezergailis) предложил другие списки, которые могли находиться в Государственном Историческом Архиве Латвии. Итак, план действий был очевиден: обнаружть имена из документов архива, таким образом пополнив скудные списки погибших.

Мне не удалось уговорить организацию оставшихся в живых помочь мне организовать этот проект, поэтому я взялся за этот проект сам. Маргерс Вестерманис, директор Музея-архива «Евреи в Латвии», дал мне ценный совет о источниках документов и нашёл человека, который мог бы заняться архивной работой в Риге. Скоро этой задачей занялся Юрис Дубровскис, 19-летний студент, которому не смотря на напряжённость своей академической работы, удалось внести тысячи имён в базу данных на компьютере. Благодаря электронной почте и 10-часовой разнице между Ригой и Калифорнией, мы имели возможность пересылать базу данных туда и обратно почти ежедневно, таким образом я имел возможность проверять и продолжать работу Юриса, пока он спал.

В августовской переписи 1941 года нашлось только 5680 из ~7140 имён евреев города Лиепая. Поэтому мы продолжили наши поиски, используя всевозможные источники: Яд Вашем, Советская Черезвычайная Комиссия 1945 года, Штутгоф, International Tracing Service и 10 других. Итак, мы нашли 7060 имён. Большинство из этих людей были убиты, но мы нашли прямое доказательство смерти только для ~3000 человек. Таким образом, нам надо было узнать, кто из оставшихся ~4000 человек погиб. Списки убитых были уничтожены или по непонятным причинам находились под ключём в архивах КГБ. Поэтому мы решили использовать побочный метод, чтобы установить имена жертв: если бы мы имели полный список тех, кто остался в живых, тогда можно было бы предположить что те, кто не попал в этот список – погибли. Итак мы посвятили своё время трудной попытке найти имена выживших, главным образом узнавая их у тех, кто остался в живых, а также из списка выживших евреев города Лиепая 1992 года[1]. Полный отчёт о методологии находится в другом издании.[2]

Информация этих источников в разной степени незакончена, неточна, и непоследовательна, особенно данные из Яд Вашем (1403 человека) и Черезвычайной комиссии (756 человек), часто минимальна: дана только фамилия без имени, возраста и адреса. Даже когда упомянуты имена—это неофициальные, употребляемые только семьёй и друзьями имена, большинство имён на иврите. То же самое с возрастом погибших: или вовсе не дан, или дан предположительный возраст с разницей 10–20 лет. Записи из лагеря Штутгоф более детальны, но многие заключённые германизировали свои имена, часто изменяя их до неузнаваемости, и также изменяли даты рождения, чтобы избежать «селекции». Хотя мы очень пытались сравнить эту неполную информацию, около 360 человек остаются плохо опознаными. Возможно, что половина этих имён—дубликаты существующих, особенно люди с одинаковыми фамилиями. Но мы включили в список эти 360 имён, считая, что лучше иметь несколько дубликатов, чем исключить из списка настоящие жертвы только потому, что их имена не были правильно зарегистрированы. Так же как Безымянный солдат («имя которого известно только Богу»), эти имена символизируют несколько сотен погибших, про которых мы не нашли никакой информации.

Информация о тех, кто провел годы войны в СССР, тоже неправильная. Официальный список сосланных из Латвии (182 еврея из города Лиепая)[3] завершён только на 90%. Также существуют списки солдатов-евреев. Но мы не нашли списков беженцев, которые находились в СССР. Имена из этой группы—210 человек – мы узнали из многих источников, в основном от тех, кто остался в живых.

В отличие от многих памятных книг, эта книга мрачная, сосредоточена главным образом на именах жертв и тех, кто остался в живых. Здесь пропущены ностальгические воспоминания о родном городе, Второй—доклад Соломона Фейгерсона, пережившего Холокост, освещает эти события с менее беспристрастной позиции жертвы. Потом следует список всех 7000+ имён с основной информацией о каждом.

В нашей базе данных намного больше информации, чем мы могли включить в эту книгу. Поэтому эта база помещена в Интернете по адресу: http://www.ej-anders.com. Изменения в эту базу будут время от времени вноситься по крайней мере до 2002 года, после чего она будет переведена по другому адресу – может быть в US Holocaust Memorial Museum или Яд Вашем.

THE KILLINGS IN THE CITIES: LIEPĀJA*[1]

Andrew Ezergailis

> According to the headquarters of the 18th Army, civilians in Liepāja have also engaged in fighting against the Germans. Therefore in addition to the EK 1a, a part of EK 2 has been ordered there with the assignment to deal with the situation ruthlessly.
> Ereignismeldung, July 1, 1941

The Germans distrusted Liepāja more than any other Latvian city. It was a proletarian and a leftist town, and, as a port, an element in a skein of international shipping routes. Since the collapse of Russia in 1917 its activities had been much reduced. Liepāja was the first thorn in the crown of the initial Barbarossa success.[2] The Germans had hoped to take the city on the second day of the war. Late on June 22, they penetrated the Latvian frontiers and came within striking distance of the city. Had the progress of the 291 Infantry Division been one-third as fast on the second day as it was on the first, Liepāja would have been German by the next afternoon. As it happened, to the surprise of the Germans, the Red Army forces and the civilian gvardists were no pushovers, but held on for almost a whole week. In retrospect, the tenacity of Liepāja gives weight to Stalin's words delivered on July 3, 1941, that "no army is invincible." In a small way Liepāja forecast what would happen to the German army at Moscow.

When they finally entered the city, the Germans were in a surly and suspicious mood. Dead bodies, military hardware, and rubble were littered all over the streets.[3] War damage was extensive, fires burned and smoldered for days. Calming the city was not easy. Sniping at the German patrols continued for days, and never completely stopped for the duration of the war.[4] The spirit of resistance in Liepāja also to some degree translated itself into a greater sympathy for Jews than in some other parts of Latvia.[5] Pacifying the city was not the only aim of the Germans. On the first day of the occupation a vehicle with a loudspeaker drove through the city, announcing: "People of Liepāja! Go to bed and trust the German army to guard your life and property. Whoever is on the street between 7:00 in the evening and 8:00 in the morning will be considered an enemy and shot without a warning." The cracking of plate glass—a soldier's rifle butt breaking windows—was a frequent sound in Liepāja's shopping district.[6] The hunt for the Jews began with the first hours of occupation.

Learning of the resistance, Stahlecker ordered a detail of Einsatzkommando 1a and 2 to Liepāja, "to deal with the situation ruthlessly."[7] Some of the ruthlessness is evident in the retribution rules. Nowhere else in Latvia did the Germans announce the severity of death threats as early as in Liepāja.[8] On July 1, 1941, two days after the occupation began, the commandant of Liepāja, Korvettenkapitän Stein, issued a call mandating the killing of ten hostages for any act of sabotage or robbery committed.[9] In the same announcement Stein also set up an ambiguous relationship between the civilians and soldiers,

[1] The primary information about the killing of the Jews in Liepāja and its vicinity, and about the individuals and Police units involved in the killings was accumulated by the Hannover Landgericht in the trial of SD and Ordnungspolizei officials Grauel, Reiche, Strott, Kuketta, Fahrbach and Rosenstock in 1971. Our knowledge about the killing of Liepāja Jews is more complete than for any other Latvian city, save Rīga.

[3] The war scene within Liepāja is well described by Siljakovs, Mana atbilde, Vol. 2, pp. 41–43.

[4] The German suspicion of the locals in Liepāja never ceased. After a shooting incident, the Liepāja naval commander issued a notice to the German personnel that, considering what had happened, soldiers should keep a distance from the local population (Mēs apsūdzam, p. 72). Also LVVA, P–83–1–216, p. 2.

[5] For example on October 11, 1941, Liepāja Gebietskommissar Alnor wrote to Generalkommissar Drechsler that the killing of the Jews had created a general dismay in the city. The mayor of Liepāja, he wrote, who usually agrees with anything, came to him and reported the "great dissatisfaction" in the city (Mēs apsūdzam, p. 155). Also LVVA, P–69–1–17, pp. 124–26.

[8] The role of the Wehrmacht in the atrocities in Latvia is most fully evaluated by Vestermanis, Tā rīkojās vērmahts, pp. 64 and 68.

[9] Kurzemes Vārds, 2 July 1941. In the witness chair after the war, Stein explained that he meant the hostage rule more as a warning than a reality, because to begin with they had no hostages to kill. The same issue of the newspaper also carried an announcement of 28 June 1941, signed by Col. Karl Lotmeyer, in which Liepāja was declared to be under siege. Thus carrying weapons was prohibited, rules of blackout were ordered to be observed, and those engaged in sabotage were to be punished by death (Vestermanis, Tā rīkojās vērmahts, p. 47).

saying that in the vicinity of Liepāja many Red Army soldiers had exchanged their uniforms for civilian clothes and thus had foregone the right to be treated as POWs.

On July 8 the threat was escalated by Korvettenkapitän Brückner, Stein's replacement, and given an anti-Jewish twist: "The Latvian inhabitants are encouraged to report to the Security Police all hiding Bolsheviks and Jewish thieves. Should the events of the last two nights be repeated, 100 hostages will be shot for every wounded German soldier."[10] As previously noted, on July 5, Brückner issued the first comprehensive anti-Jewish edict, consisting of numerous provisions:

1. All Jews to wear an easily recognizable yellow marking on the back and the chest [a marking] that is not smaller than ten cm. by ten cm.
2. All men from sixteen to sixty must appear at 7:00 A.M. daily for work duty.
3. The shopping time for all Jews is 10:00 A.M. to 12:00 noon.
4. Jews are allowed to leave their quarters only from 10:00 to 12:00 in the morning and 3:00 to 5:00 in the afternoon.
5. The Jews are forbidden to attend public events and walk on the seashore.
6. When meeting an uniformed German the Jew must leave the sidewalk.
7. It is forbidden for the Jews to use any public transportation.
8. All Jewish shops must have the sign "A Jewish business" in its window.
9. All Jews must turn in all radios, all means of transportation, all uniforms and all weapons, and all typewriters.[11]

The evidence in the Grauel trial showed that, though the SD and its EK of EG A were the major organizers and perpetrators of atrocities in Latvia, they were not the only ones. In Liepāja, the Wehrmacht, the navy, and the Ordnungspolizei also contributed to the killings. As in Rīga, it was the military commandants who first issued anti-Jewish regulations and threatened severe punishments for their violation.

In the long run, the fate of the city and of its Jews was the same as elsewhere in Latvia. The killings started at the time of the occupation and continued through December 1941. The majority of Liepāja's Jews—2,749—were killed in a three-day massacre on December 15 to 17. Unlike in Rīga, the ghetto in Liepāja was established only in June 1942, which meant that most of the Jews that were not killed in 1941 still resided in their homes until the summer of 1942.[12]

The depositions of Latvian SD witnesses from Liepāja have helped a great deal to fill in the information, from the Latvian perspective, about the German occupation and the killing of the Jews. The evidence from Liepāja has much to contribute to understanding and defining the relationship that existed between the German SD and the Latvian police units. The German and especially the Latvian witnesses show that the Latvian Liepāja SD detail participated heavily in the killings between October and December. Yet, there is nothing in the evidence that substantiates the spontaneity theory that the Latvians killed on their own. From the first minutes of the conquest, the sniping incidents aside, the Germans were in control of the city. For a Latvian to own a weapon was dangerous.

THE JEWS OF LIEPĀJA[13]

The Liepāja district, except for the city itself, was not very heavily Jewish. The 1935 census showed 7,364 Jews. An additional 300 lived in the towns of Vaiņode, Grobiņa, and Priekule, for a total of about 7,600 people. Subtracting 25 percent, the rate of Jewish escapees from Latvia, we may suppose that 5,700 were trapped by the Germans. It is not very likely that 300[14] of them survived the Holocaust. As many as 5,000 of the 5,700 Jews were killed in and around Liepāja, mostly in 1941. In 1942, 800 Liepāja Jews were alive in the ghetto. In the autumn of 1943, the ghetto was closed, and all Jews were transferred to the Mežaparks (Kaiserwald) concentration camp.[15]

[10] Kurzemes Vārds, 8 July 1941; Landgericht Hannover: Strafurteil gegen Grauel, p. 73; also in Mēs apsūdzam, pp. 36–37.

[11] The last two paragraphs specified that all objects requested must be turned in at Toma iela 19, and that the order was effective immediately. It was signed by Korvettenkapitän Brückner (Kurzemes Vārds, 5 July 1941). The Hannover judges in the Grauel verdict noted that it is not known whether in issuing the order Brückner represented army or SD interests.

[12] For the story of a surviving Jew, see George David Schwab, "Destruction of a Family," in G. Schneider (ed.), Muted Voices, pp. 145–156.

[13] There is no good modern account about the Jews of Liepāja specifically, or of Kurzeme in general. In Aizpute there was one of the earliest Jewish settlements in Latvia in the 16th century (Bobe, The Jews in Latvia). George Schwab, son of a well-to-do doctor of Liepāja, remembers his life in prewar Liepāja as idyllic ("The Libau I Remember," The Latvian Jewish Courier, No. 1, March 1985). He did, however, report having encountered some anti-Semitism in the school he attended.

[14] We may postulate that in Liepāja more Jews were saved by the Gentiles than in any other city, because in Liepāja the Jews who were not killed lived in the city until June 1942.

[15] The totals for the people killed in the period from 25 September 1941 to June 1942 are 4,761 Jews, 209 communists, and 193 Gypsies. In 1942 more than 800 Liepāja Jews were still alive. The terror and hardship of life under the German occupation have been most poignantly described by George David Schwab, "The Destruction of a Family," in G. Schneider (ed.), Muted Voices, pp. 145–156.

The major killing sites in Liepāja were Rainis Park in the middle of the city, the seashore south of the lighthouse, the Fishermen's Harbor, the area near the Olympia Stadium, and the "Smokehouse." Some killings also occurred just north of the Naval Harbor, near the water tower. The site of the largest killing was Šķēde, on an erstwhile Latvian army training grounds in the dunes near the Baltic. Along with the Jews, hostages, communists, and Gypsies were killed there.

THE LIEPĀJA SD—ITS LEADERSHIP AND ACTIVITIES

The first EG Teilkommando that entered Liepāja was EK 1a, about twenty men strong and led by SS-Obersturmführer Reichert. They arrived on June 29, the same day as did the fighting forces. One of the very early EM reported that Security Police-type measures had been carried out in the district even before the fall of Liepāja.[17] EK 1a, or at least a part of it, ensconced themselves in the Hotel Pēterburga.

One of the first EK 1a activities was to search the NKVD building for evidence of Soviet atrocities,[18] preferably corpses, that could be publicly displayed.

In the course of the occupation Liepāja had six SD chiefs: Reichert, Grauel, Kügler, Jurgschait, Hildmann, and Zingler.

The SD soon moved from Hotel Pēterburga to a building at Kūrmājas ielā 21. The Latvian SD detail at first was housed in Kūrmājas ielā 17, but in 1942 it was moved to number 21, where it occupied the first floor of the building. Kūrmājas ielā 17 at that time was taken over by the Latvian SD Political Police. The only Latvians allowed in the German quarters in Kūrmājas ielā 21 were the interpreters. The Germans had a telegraph unit and in the cellar a workshop for Jewish goldsmiths, watchmakers, radio technicians, cobblers, and tailors.[19]

The SD controlled, if it did not actually administer, all places of confinement in Liepāja and the vicinity: the Women's Prison (also referred to as the Interrogation Prison) at Tiesu iela 5, the City Prison for criminals at Dārzu iela, the concentration point at Dārzu iela 11, the POW camp "Dulag 101" (under Krapp and Kaiser), a transit camp for the family members of the Red Army personnel (in a school building at Alejas iela), and the Jewish ghetto at the corner of Dārzu and Kungu iela. The Liepāja concentration facility was transferred to Saldus on December 16, 1941, where the inmates were forced to work in the local cement factory.

[16]In many particulars one can question the accuracy of the trial data.

[17]The locations of the actions were Priekule, Durbe, Asīte, and Grobiņa.

[18]The disinterment of corpses was one of the preoccupations of the SD. As noted elsewhere it was part of the German propaganda to blame the Jews for the Bolshevik crimes. See Landgericht Hannover: Strafurteil gegen Grauel, deposition of Harry Friedrichson.

The Women's Prison was the focal point for SD activities. All political prisoners were sent there, and in the initial months it served as a concentration facility, a transit station, for the Jews on the way to the killing grounds. Under the authority of the Liepāja SD also were the cities and districts in the western part of Kurzeme: Saldus, Kuldīga, Talsi, Aizpute, Priekule, Vaiņode, Skrunda, and others. As regards the killing of the Jews, the SD activities extended only to the Liepāja and Aizpute districts.

Reichert

The killings in Liepāja started as early as June 29, but the first documented massacre took place on the evening of July 3 or 4, when Grauel led his own detail of EK 2 into the city and found Reichert's team killing Jews in Rainis Park. It was a German operation with no Latvians on the site. How many Jews were killed there we do not know. The Russians had left fortification ditches, which Reichert was filling up with corpses. One of the participants, Harry Friedrichson, testified that on the one occasion in which he participated about 150 Jews were killed.[20] He also thought that the killing squad was a [20]The estimate of the victims in Rainis Park varies from several dozen to about 300. The Extraordinary Soviet Commission, investigating the Nazi crimes with its usual exaggeration, noted that 1,430 people were killed in the park (LVVA, P–132–30–21, pp. 14–17).

Wehrmacht unit.[21] Grauel testified that when he met Reichert he saw about a dozen Jews near the pits, but he did not look into the ditch and count the corpses.

Grauel's commando consisted of about thirty men; more than half of them were Ordnungspolizei, wearing green uniforms, from the 9th Battalion attached to the commando in Gumbinnen.[22] Reichert told Grauel that he [Reichert] was carrying out a special assignment. Grauel left and reported to the commandant of the city, who assigned living quarters to his detail. Eventually Grauel's detail was billeted in a house at Kūrmājas Prospect 21. Reichert left the city on the day after Grauel's arrival.

Grauel

Unlike Reichert, Grauel in the beginning was more prone to organizational work than to killing, although once orders came and he understood the assignment, he was not shy. He took charge of the Women's Prison and appointed Reiche to supervise it. The prisoners were mostly Jews, but there were also other civilians—communists, communist-sympathizers, and men who had fought against the Nazis in Liepāja. Rumors abounded that the Jews were responsible for the communist atrocities. Grauel, assisted by Reiche, Kuketta, Handke, and Michalsky, set up a table in the prison courtyard to hear and screen the cases. Many prisoners arrived with a slip of paper specifying the cause of arrest. Those who arrived without a slip were interrogated and a brief deposition taken. The Jews were imprisoned without a hearing. This meant that Jews were imprisoned as Jews.[23] Werner Hartmann, a war correspondent and propagandist, went ashore July 6 and visited the jail. He saw the cells so crammed, mostly with Jews, that there was no place to lie down. The officers bringing the victims to the prison were mostly, if not exclusively, Latvian self-defense men.

The first killings that Grauel carried out in Liepāja were ordered by the city commandant, Brückner, as a follow-up to the retribution rules of July 1. On July 8 an announcement was published in Kurzemes Vārds, saying that as a reprisal for the shooting at the German patrols that had taken place during the previous nights, thirty Bolsheviks and Jews had been shot.[24]

The execution of the "hostages" took place on July 7 in the dunes, near the lighthouse south of the city. The victims were selected in the Women's Prison, taking every fifth prisoner. The killing was done by Grauel's men.[25]

About the time of the execution of the hostages, according to Grauel, Reichert reappeared in Liepāja with an angry message from Stahlecker. Grauel was accused of not doing what he was supposed to do. Reichert especially reproached Grauel for allowing the Jews who were shot in Rainis Park to be reburied in a cemetery.[26]

As a proof of his activities, Grauel showed Reichert the prisoners lists that he had compiled. Reichert checked off a number of names in the roster and said that they must be shot, and that the killing must take place that very day. Grauel asked Neuman to organize an execution for July 8. The killings began on July 8, continued on July 9 and 10, each day executing at least one hundred men.27 The killings were done by German and perhaps also Latvian teams. The periphery was guarded by both Germans and Latvians, the latter identified by a red-white-red armband. The victims consisted almost exclusively of Jews, and they were brought to the site from the Women's Prison in truckloads of twenty people. After a round of killings German officers with machine guns entered the pit to examine the victims, and if any signs of life were found "insurance" shots were delivered.

Werner Hartman, using his press card, entered the killing grounds on July 8 and stayed there from 11:00 A.M. to 5:00 P.M. He saw about ten to fifteen SD men present and remembered a long ditch that ended in a pit. The freedom fighters, as Hartman referred to the Latvians and the SD men, drove the Jews ten at a time into the pit and aligned them in a double row. Brains and blood splattered all over. Hartman testified that he remembered that about 200 people were killed in his presence.[28]

After the action, Grauel requested Batz, the head of the EK 2, to relieve him from the assignment, since he was not up to the job. In a few days Kügler, with orders from Batz, arrived to replace him. Grauel's detail dispersed; some stayed in [22]Among the Ordnungspolizei members were Bitzer, Huckenholz, Jungkunz, Josef Kaiser, Mrozek, Preuschoff, Trebesch, and Zahn. It must also be noted that apparently most of the Polizei men were greenhorns, draftees, that previously had done no police work. [25]On this occasion five persons were shot at a time.

[26]The reburying of the Jews was a well-known story in Liepāja at the time.

[27]The victims, ten at a time, were made to enter the pit, about four by fifteen meters, and were shot with bolt-action rifles from the edge of the embankment. In the beginning the marksmen were told to divide the aim, one at the head, the other at the heart zone. Later, the order was for both shooters to aim at the head.

[28]Landgericht Hannover: Strafurteil gegen Grauel, p. 91.

Liepāja, others left for Rīga directly, still others went with Grauel to Ventspils. In spite of his alleged revulsion over the killings in Liepāja, Grauel organized and carried out actions in Ventspils. For some three months thereafter he worked in the Rīga SD headquarters, but by the end of October he was back in Germany studying jurisprudence.

Kügler[29]

SS Untersturmführer Kügler arrived in Liepāja on July 10 or 11. Thereafter, the further killings in 1941 and all subsequent years were Kügler's responsibility. It was Kügler who stabilized the SD presence in Liepāja and systematized the killing procedures. Kügler organized, attended, and gave orders at all of the killings from the middle of July 1941 through April 1943,[30] when he was transferred and SS-Obersturmführer Kurt Jurgschait replaced him. After September 1941, the German SD detail was reduced to a team of about fifteen to twenty men. Kügler ran the SD network in the western part of Kurzeme, where he oversaw the SD in the districts of Aizpute and Talsi. He also oversaw the Women's Prison, the Latvian SD Guard Platoon, the concentration camp in Saldus, and the Liepāja ghetto.

Although organized by Kügler, the killings themselves were carried out and assisted by numerous groups, including the German SD detachment of Liepāja, the Ordnungspolizei of Liepāja, the Latvian SD Guard Platoon (Latvian SD Wachtmannschaft), parts of the Latvian Liepāja Schutzmannschaften, and the Arājs commando; from Rīga. There is also more than a strong possibility that some German Wehrmacht and naval forces participated in the killings, especially in the beginning phase and perhaps also in the December action. The co-defendants in the Grauel case, Handke, Kuketta, and Fahrbach, admitted that during 1941 there was at least one action every two weeks under Kügler.[31] In reality, during the months of July, August, and September there were more than two actions every week, for killings also took place in the vicinity of Liepāja—Priekule, Vaiņode and Grobiņa. The victims, as numerous witnesses testified, were selected by Kügler himself. He went through the lists and interrogation documents, and the names slated for killing he red-penciled with a big E (Erschiessungen)—marked to be shot.

It is also peculiar to Kügler's administration that victims often were killed in small groups, frequently fewer than ten. The killer team was brought to the site, but had nothing to do with digging the pits or burying the corpses. The basic weapon was a bolt-action rifle (the Latvian SD used Russian rifles). The killings were carried out in the Biķernieki method, as established by Stahlecker's men in Rīga. The problem of guarding the periphery was minimized by bringing the victims to the site in these small groups. The truck carrying the victims would stop about forty meters from the pit, the people would be ordered out and to lie down on the ground. There was no question about the victims hearing and seeing what was going on. While the Jews from the first truck were killed, the new group of victims was delivered. Using this method of killing, a team of thirty or even twenty men, including the guards, could murder as many as a hundred people in less than two hours; in a day's time 400 people could be liquidated.

Alcohol was served at the killing site. The Germans brought along coffee spiked with cognac for themselves.[32] The Latvian participants received their schnapps in bottles.

From the available evidence it is impossible to ascertain how many killings took place in the period from July to September in Liepāja. Many of the actions during this period involved relatively small numbers, and any one witness was not likely to be present at all.

[29]According to evidence in the Grauel Trial Records, in 1943 Kügler was accused of being too free with Jewish goods and was punished with eight months in prison and a fine of 800 RM. A significant factor in Kügler's "corruption" was Mrs. Kronbergs, his translator, interpreter, and lover. Siljakovs thinks that under her influence Kügler learned Latvian, and saved Liepāja street names from being germanized. She is also known to have on occasion warned Latvians of forthcoming searches and arrests (Siljakovs, Mana atbilde, vol. 2, p. 103). That she was no one-dimensional lady was also revealed by George Schwab, who says that Mrs. Kronbergs knew his mother before the war, and during the killing period hired her as a housemaid, thus securing her an SD work-pass (Schwab, "The Destruction of a Family," in G. Schneider (ed.), Muted Voices. Mrs. Kronbergs emigrated to Canada after the war.

[30]Several German SD witnesses, who had served under Kügler, testified that he was on leave during the big killing of December, 1941. But all the Latvian witnesses affirmed his presence. For Kügler's point of view see Landgericht Hannover: Anklageschrift gegen Grauel und andere, pp. 94–100. The strongest evidence for Kügler's absence in Liepāja during the December massacre was Reiche's testimony.

[33]The presence of Arājs' commando is establishable in a variety of ways, including the testimony of Pavlovskis, who as a self-defense member was placed to guard the road leading to the site (Pavlovskis deposition, p. 32). The date is identified by Vanags, Deposition of Aleksandrs Vanags, January 11 and 19, 1945, Arājs Trial Records, p. 4491. According to Vanags they stayed in Liepāja for four days, and Arājs men were also active in the arrest of Jews. Vesterman was mistaken in saying that 3,000 Jews were killed on that day ("Survival in a Libau Bunker," G. Schneider (ed.) Muted Voices, pp. 157–67).

THE DECEMBER MASSACRE

More than half of the Liepāja Jews were killed during a three-day massacre, December 15 to 17, in the dunes of Šķēde, about fifteen kilometers north of the city. It had been a Latvian army practice range, and nearby there were also some military barracks where in 1941 some German soldiers were quartered. On the killing grounds, less than a hundred meters from the ditch, was a wooden structure, variously described as a garage, a barn, and a horse barn,[40] which was used as a final transit station for the Jews.

The order to carry out the murder was telegraphed from Rīga to the German SD station. In the absence of Kügler,[41] the recipient of the wire was Reiche, who took the telegram to the police chief of Liepāja, Dr. Dietrich. In the December 13th issue of Kurzemes Vārds Dietrich placed a notice: "Announcement. Jews are not allowed to leave their living quarters on Monday, December 15, and Tuesday, December 16."

At this time Liepāja Jews were still living in the city, and gathering them up for the massacre was far from simple. The arrests began on the night of December 13 to 14, and they were carried out by the Latvian police forces. The victims were brought to the Women's Prison, where Jews of all ages were jammed into the courtyard. As reports tell us it was simply hell, for the space was not sufficient for the people assembled. The Jews were ordered to stand with their faces towards the wall, and told not to move or look around for relatives or at the watchmen. The noise was earsplitting and the SD guards and the watchmen reacted with beatings and brutality. Some Jews were transported to the Šķēde grounds on the evening of December 14, and held in the wooden building overnight.

Lt. Pēteris Galiņš,[42] the commander of Latvian SD guards, ordered the Latvian SD platoon to be ready at 5:30 in the morning. On the first day perhaps no more than twenty Latvians were ordered out, enough for one killing team.[43]

In the morning of December 15 there was a freeze, but by noon the temperature had climbed to +5° C. On the following two days, the temperature did not get much over 0° C. It was cold enough for the killers to wear overcoats. The ground at the site was frozen, and there was frost and ice on the streets. The column was driven, as in the Rīga-Rumbula action, by the Latvian policemen under the supervision of the German SD. The Liepāja December action had much in common with Jeckeln's system, although its main feature, the Sardinenpackung, was not adopted.

When the Latvian unit got to Šķēde, Galiņš told them that they would have to do the killing. The site was about another kilometer from the road, towards the sea. The pit was a long, deep ditch dug in the dunes, parallel to the shore and about three meters wide and a hundred meters long. The Germans were already there. According to Bulvāns, one of the Latvian platoon, the killing was done interchangeably by a German unit, the Latvian SD Platoon, and a Latvian Schutzmannschaften team. The killing began about 8:00 A.M.

The Jews were taken from the barn as needed, in twenty-person groups. They were led to the place forty to fifty meters from the ditch and made to lie face down on the ground. Groups of ten were told to stand up and, except for children, to undress, at first to one's underwear, and, when driven near the pits, to undress completely. Bulvāns saw Strott and Krapp using a whip on those who did not go to the pit. The victims shrieked, whimpered, cried, and fell on their knees in front of the executioners to beg for their lives. They were positioned along the sea side of the ditch, facing the sea. The team of killers positioned themselves across the ditch, and two marksmen shot at the same victim. Blood occasionally spurted on the clothes of the killers. Children who could walk were treated as adults, but each baby was held by his or her mother and killed with her. The mothers were told to hold the babies above their shoulders and one of the marksmen would aim at the mother, the other at the child. For the corpses that did not fall into the ditch, there was a kicker[44] who rolled them in. After each volley a German SD man stepped into the ditch to inspect the bodies and to finish off any who showed life.

After killing ten sets of victims the team was relieved by another; Strott and Handke took pictures with a Minox.[45]. Around noon, a milk can of rum appeared. The guards and the killers drank by dipping a glass into it. High Wehrmacht and navy officers visited the site.[46]

[40]Horse barn is correct, since a cavalry battalion of the Latvian army was housed there.

[41]In spite of Latvian testimony, the Hannover judge believed Kügler's version—that he was on leave in Germany.

[42]Very little is known about Lt. Pēteris Galiņš. He was killed in Russia in the winter of 1943.

[43]The Latvian unit was driven to the killing site in a Russian-made GAS truck by Ādolfs Ciesa. From the Kūrmāja quarters, the driver took Kūrmājas iela to Jūras iela, over the bridge, then along Raiņa and Kalpaka iela to the canal, over another bridge, and then they passed the area of Kara osta to the Šķēde shore. On the way the trucks passed one column of Jews driven to the site on foot (Landgericht Hannover: deposition of Jāzeps Linarts, p. 19).

[44]Sergeant Jaugietis from the Latvian Platoon performed as a kicker for a while.

[45]Landgericht Hannover: deposition of Linarts, pp. 20–21.

[46]Landgericht Hannover: deposition of Antons Bulvāns, p. 25.

The clothes were piled up in heaps, and taken away by German military trucks. The action lasted until dark.[47]

We can assume that the killings on the second and the third day of the December action proceeded about the same way as on the first, but for that we have little evidence. The three Latvian witnesses, Bulvāns, Linarts, and Pavlovskis, who gave the fullest description of the killings, testified that they did not participate on the following days.

After the December killings, the Germans returned to Šķēde over and over again. They kept extending the ditch that was used in December, and by 1943 it was rumored that the ditch was one kilometer long.[48] The undressing of the prisoners also continued until the end.[49] In 1943, chlorine was scattered over the corpses.

LATVIAN PARTICIPANTS

The Latvian Schutzmannschaften in Liepāja did not originate from the partisan units, as they did in some other parts of Latvia. It appears that in Liepāja, due to the fierceness of fighting there, as well as the leftist sympathies of many in town, the Latvians did not develop armed anti-communist units as they did in Rīga and many countryside regions. The German order to surrender weapons came even before the city was taken. Latvian self-defense units came into being after the German occupation of the city, and from the beginning they operated under German supervision. Sniping incidents aside, due to martial law and the curfew, the possibility that Latvians in Liepāja could have carried out any substantial killings on their own without the Germans knowing it, seeing it, and ordering it does not even arise. Even the mere possession of a weapon in Liepāja, as elsewhere, could earn one a sentence of death. A loudspeaker car drove through the city inviting Latvians to join the self-defense forces. In the July 1st entry of the journal of the 291st Infantry Division it is noted: "An order Ic was issued to organize self-defense, and to arm it."[50] During the first days of occupation two self-defense groups were assembled; one was in Jaunliepāja, in the wire factory where the Germans had established occupation headquarters; the other was in the prefecture in the old city. The former was organized and led by Žanis Sniķeris and 1st Lieutenant Laumanis. Many workers from the wire factory joined. They were identified by a white arm band with a green swastika on the sleeve. The unit in Vecliepāja, consisting of Latvian army officers and Aizsargi, wore arm bands in the national colors, red-white-red. Taking a walk through the city, Kārlis Siljakovs, who later became an SD political investigator, saw a lot of Aizsargi in front of the Roma Hotel.[51]

Initially the Liepāja self-defense groups were poorly armed, and when their members did receive arms, they were Russian bolt-action rifles.[52] Most members wore the Latvian Army or Aizsargi uniforms, but those who had neither wore civilian garb, even Boy Scout uniforms. Organization of the self-defense forces in Liepāja was much slower than in Rīga. At first, these units did not make a firm connection with the resident SD unit in Liepāja. From the evidence in the Grauel trial it appears that during the first month the Latvians were not used as killing units at all. They were, however, active in arresting people and taking them to the Women's Prison. The source for the arrest orders in Liepāja has not been established, but there is every reason to believe that it was the Wehrmacht or naval commander, not the SD. Among the early assignments that the Latvians received was guarding the prisons, but it is not clear under whose authority they operated. After the arrival of Grauel on July 4, the Women's Prison was managed by the SD, but the Latvian guards were not considered members of the SD.[53] The Grauel trial judges correctly noted that the self-defense units were organized militarily, and they were not the precursors of the Liepāja Schutzmannschaften battalions.[54]

For the judges in the Grauel case it was difficult to establish when the first Latvian killing detail saw action. As escorts of the victims and guards of the periphery, the Latvian self-defense units were noticed as early as July 8. But until the end of September there is no clear evidence that the local Germans—Reichert, Grauel, and Kügler—trusted the Latvians. In the [48]The Soviet records show the Šķēde killing grounds to have the following sizes of ditches: 1) 50 x 4 meters; 2) 265 x 8 meters; 3) 25 x 15 meters; 4) 50 x 10 meters; 5) 70 x 5 meters; and 5) a pit of 35 square meters.

[54]Several Latvian witnesses in the Grauel case testified that the 21st Liepāja Schutzmannschaft Battalion participated in the December killings. That assertion betrays the KGB hand in preparing the depositions, because the 21st Schutzmannschaft Battalion, although it originated in Liepāja, was organized in February 1942. Some Liepāja Schutzmannschaft members may have entered the 21st Battalion, it is not likely that many did. In the 1970s the Soviets conducted a series of war crimes trials, as part of their struggle against "nationalists," in which the 21st Battalion was accused of participating in the Šķēde killings (KGB Trial Archives, Rīga—cases 45225, 45232, 45233, 45234 45236). For the history of the 21st Battalion see Freivalds (ed.), Latviešu karavīrs otrā pasaules kara laikā, vol. 2, p. 111 and the 21st Battalion files in the LCK archive at the Hoover Institution on War, Revolution, and Peace.

second half of July the Arājs commando made its first blue bus visit to Liepāja, which may be an indication that a local killing team had not yet been established. Up to and through September the main killing units were the German SD and the 2nd Company of the 13th Police Battalion, wearing green uniforms. Only when the 2nd Company left Liepāja, on September 10, 1941, was a Latvian SD Platoon (SD Wachzug) organized.

The Latvian SD Wachzug

On September 20 Kügler set up a special thirty-man Latvian Wachzug des SD (Latvian Guard Platoon of the SD), which became one of the main killing teams in Liepāja.[55] The German Ordnungspolizei unit that carried out the killings until that time apparently was transferred. Administratively, the Liepāja Latvian SD became a part of the Arājs organization, although Arājs himself had no control over the unit.[56] According to witnesses, the Liepāja unit was not made up of volunteers, but simply split off from the city's self-defense forces, mostly from the wire factory unit. Before joining the unit the men had no experience in killing and were made to practice with blanks. Bulvāns tells us that in the first two executions in which he participated he did no shooting; they were told to learn the method.[57]

After they joined the SD platoon the men continued to wear Latvian army uniforms, but for identification were given a green arm band with a skull and crossbones on it.[58] Around mid-1942, when many members of the platoon were ordered to the front, the unit was dressed in German uniforms. When formed, the platoon was housed in Kūrmājas ielā 17, but later was moved to Kūrmājas iela 21, into the same building as the German SD headquarters.

As the name indicates, the Latvian SD Guard Platoon had to perform various guard duties and run errands for the Germans; they guarded the SD house and transported prisoners, most frequently from the Women's Prison to SD quarters for interrogations. The commander of the platoon during the killing period was Lt. Pēteris Galiņš. Later First Lieutenant Bogdanovs and Lieutenant Lapa, from the Rīga Arājs commando, were associated with the Liepāja SD unit. In its early days the platoon was divided into two sections, one lead by Žanis Essenbergs, the other by Jauģietis. While the platoon consisted of men from Liepāja, the members lived in their own homes. Later, when outsiders joined the unit, they resided in dormitories on Republikas iela.

The Latvian witnesses agreed that the first time they carried out a killing was at the end of September or early October in the vicinity of the lighthouse, just past the Olympia Stadium. They differed on whether they walked or were driven to the site. P. Pavlovskis remembered that in the first action about twenty of the Latvians participated.[59] They were ordered by Lieutenant Galiņš to assemble at their headquarters at 5:00 in the morning, and they walked or were driven to the site. Galiņš picked ten men for the killing team, positioned them across the ditch from where the victims were placed. Five victims at a time were brought out and killed. The total number killed on that occasion was twenty people, and it took them about one hour to do it.

In addition to carrying out the killings in Liepāja, on at least three occasions the Latvian platoon was sent outside the city: to Vaiņode (November 1), to Aizpute (November 3), and to Grobiņa (November ?).

Vaiņode

Vaiņode was a town of 1,416 inhabitants sixty kilometers southeast of Liepāja, where 125 Jews had lived in 1935. Galiņš led an SD group of twenty-five men to Vaiņode. Eight Germans accompanied them but they traveled separately in two passenger cars. Schutzmannschaft men from Vaiņode had brought the victims to the killing site outside the town, where they were quartered in an uninhabited military building. When the killing began the victims were brought out in groups of ten. About fifty meters from the building there was a barracks and behind it some woods. Between the woods and the barracks there was a ditch. Knowing that they would be killed, Jews had thrown away their valuables.[60] Kügler was angry at the local policemen for permitting the Jews to do that. The killing was finished at 5:00 in the evening, when the Liepāja group went to Vaiņode for a feast.

Aizpute

Two days after the events at Vaiņode, on November 3, the Liepāja SD Platoon was sent to Aizpute, a city northeast of Liepāja, to kill its 386 Jews.[61] The platoon of about twenty men started its day at 5:00 A.M. They picked up their weapons and ammunition at Kūrmājas iela 21 and piled into their beat-up Russian truck, driven by Ciesa. By 5:30 A.M. they were on the road to Aizpute.

Otto Vītols, a mechanic and truck driver who worked in Aizpute, received a message the evening of November 2 through his family that the local police wanted him to prepare a truck to transport people. When he arrived at work in the morning, two policemen were waiting for him and told him to prepare a truck for tomorrow. Since the truck was just a simple box, benches were installed and a canvas stretched over the top. The policemen told Vītols that he would have to transport Jews from Aizpute to the Kalvene railroad station. He was to drive to the police station near the market square.

When Vītols arrived at the market place at 7:00 or 8:00 in the morning of November 3rd, other trucks driven in from Liepāja were ahead of him. While Vītols was chatting with the Liepāja drivers, another truck arrived, carrying about twenty soldiers in green uniforms and wearing helmets. They carried weapons and spoke Latvian. An officer jumped out of the cab, entered the police station, and soon thereafter drove off again. The other drivers told Vītols that the soldiers came from Liepāja.

The Latvian SD Platoon men, in their depositions, recalled stopping only at the synagogue and proceeding about two kilometers towards Kalvene, where they got out and walked across a meadow road, through a stand of trees, to a pit. After the Latvians departed, Vītols remembered three Mercedes arriving, full of what looked like officers with high-peaked caps. He thought there were about fifteen of them. After checking in at the police station, the Mercedes drove off in the direction of Kalvene.

The town police chief, Muzikants, came out and told the drivers to line up at the synagogue, which was only about thirty-five meters from the market place on the bank of the Tebra River. Armed policemen jumped into the cabs and took command of the drivers. Vītols was second in the lineup at the synagogue. There were policemen (Aizsargi types) inside and outside the synagogue. Jews—young and old; men, women, and children—carrying small bundles, filled up the trucks, about twenty persons in each. A policeman gave Vītols orders to drive to Kalvene, three kilometers from Aizpute, until a chain of policemen, some in Aizsargi uniforms, some in civilian clothes, blocked the road. The Mercedes were parked there, and a couple of the Germans stood on the road. A small field road branched off to the right, across a meadow into the woods. The trucks could not drive on the meadow road because a ditch full of water cut across it. The Jews, clambering out, asked the reason for stopping, and some complained that it was a long way to the Kalvene station. Vītols knew that they would be killed.

The trucks were turned around and sent back to the synagogue. All the trucks except Vītols' made three trips. On the second trip, the drivers heard shots in the woods, salvos and then singles. On the meadow some Germans were taking charge of the Jews, whose bundles were dropped there. After the second delivery, Vītols was told to drive onto the meadow to pick up the bundles. He delivered the bundles to the police precinct and went home.

The action in the woods continued until about 5:00 in the evening. It was a routine assignment, perhaps a bit bigger than most, for the Liepāja platoon. Jews were brought in groups of ten and placed in front of the execution squad. The firing

After the killings Matīss Samovičs walked around the ditch and found several rings, one of platinum. Then he walked into the wooden building, where Jewish goods were scattered, and picked up a fur coat and a pair of boots.

team had no reserves and no replacements; every member killed about twenty people. After the action the Latvian platoon had a feast in the Aizpute police club. A sign was posted that Aizpute was Judenfrei.[62]

Grobiņa

Grobiņa was a small town ten kilometers due east of Liepāja. Only about fifteen of the ninety-five Grobiņa Jews were still living when the Liepāja Latvian SD Platoon was ordered to go there. The truck carrying the platoon went to Grobiņa churchyard road where there was a pit on the left. A ten-man execution gang killed about fifteen men and women. They finished the job in twenty minutes, and returned to Liepāja.[63]

THE LIEPĀJA GHETTO

The ghetto was established in June 1942, about eight months after the Daugavpils and Rīga ghettos. It consisted of eleven houses on four streets; about 814 Jews, including children and old people, were housed there. Until it was abandoned in October 1943, 102 people had died; in addition fifty-four were shot in the ghetto. A barbed wire fence surrounded the ghetto, and it was guarded by Latvians in black uniforms. In May 1943 a group of thirty-five Liepāja Jews, including Aaron Vesterman, were taken to Paplaka, where they worked as craftsmen for the SS.

The daily routine in the ghetto was to wake up at 5:00 A.M., leave for work two hours later, and by 7:00 P.M. to have returned to the ghetto. Everybody from age twelve had to work at hard labor. On October 8, 1943, the ghetto was dissolved and the inhabitants sent to Rīga. The official rations were meager: 215 grams of bread a day. But according to George Schwab, the son of a well-to-do doctors' family whose father was murdered in July 1941, not many of the inmates lived on the official rations alone. Food was smuggled in daily, and the commandant, Kerschner, was bribed not to interrupt the flow. A ghetto vegetable garden was started. Crime was minimal, although in the summer of 1942 two thieves who had broken into the ghetto were caught and shot.[64] Schwab remembered two inmates who were caught stealing from the ghetto store.

Life in the Liepāja ghetto has been described as brutal to tolerable. George Schwab described the conditions as harsh, but, in comparison to what he had to undergo later in Mežaparks and German concentration camps, not the worst. For entertainment there was an occasional volleyball game and group singing, as well as secretly ridiculing the Nazis. A rudimentary school for the few surviving children was started. Schwab even remembered enjoying a festive meal of roast veal with potatoes. In early October the order arrived to prepare for a trip to Rīga. Gold coins and diamonds were dug up and sewn into clothing seams. Suitcases were packed and on the night of Yom Kippur, October 8, the Jews were loaded into cattle cars and shipped to Rīga.[65] The next day Aaron Vesterman and the Paplaka group were taken back to the ghetto to pick up winter clothes. Except for three living corpses—two shoemakers and a goldsmith—it was empty. The group returned to Paplaka, where they worked until April 29, 1944, when they returned to Liepāja and were sent on to Rīga.[66]

THE TRAGIC FATE OF LIEPĀJA JEWS[1]

Solomon Feigerson

These reminiscences of the tragedy of Liepāja Jews are an indictment, exposing the crimes of the Nazi executioners and the grief and suffering of innocent people who were murdered, or crammed into a ghetto and jailed in concentration camps.

Dedicated to my grandsons, Daniel and Tom

LIEPĀJA IN 1941

Liepāja, a small Latvian town on the Baltic Sea coast, was famed for its wonderful beaches and old parks. It had an ice-free commercial port, as well as the Navy base Kara osta (German: Kriegshafen) north of the town.

Before World War II, the Jewish population of Liepāja numbered about 7,400, out of a total of 57,000. The life of the Jewish community was diverse and intensive, thanks to the activities of various organizations and parties, such as Agudat Yisroel, Trumpeldor, Hashomer Hatsair, and others. Children between the ages of 6 and 16 attended Jewish or Latvian schools. There was a Yiddish gymnasium, as well as Jewish evening schools and trade schools. About ten synagogues existed in the town.

When Germany attacked the USSR on 22 June 1941, the Soviet army and navy garrison, supported by "Workers' Militia" volunteers (among them many young Liepāja Jews), defended the town against the enemy onslaught for seven days. The fighting was fierce. Raids by dive bombers escalated daily, and after heavy bombardment by naval and land-based artillery during the night of 28/29 June, German troops seized the town. There was much damage to the center of town, and only two synagogues remained intact: Beis Midrash and the Choral Synagogue, both on Kuršu street.

An SS-Einsatzgruppen team arrived on the heels of the soldiers, and began executions of Jews. Not to be outdone, the army and navy joined in the persecutions. On 5 July, a week after occupation of the town, the newly appointed commandant, Korvetten-Kapitän Brückner, issued a set of draconian rules for Jews.

1. All Jews must wear a bright yellow marker (at least 10x10 cm) on their chests and backs.
2. All men between the ages of 16 and 60 must assemble in the Firehouse Square at 7 a.m. every day for public works. (Mostly they were brought to the Navy base, on open platforms attached to the streetcars. These were jam-packed with Jews in both winter and summer.)
3. Jews must observe a curfew, being allowed to leave their homes only 10–12 and 15–17.
4. Jews must surrender all means of transportation, weapons, uniforms, radios, and typewriters.
5. Jews are forbidden to: (a) change their place of residence, (b) use sidewalks, (c) use public transportation, (d) enter parks, cinemas, libraries, (e) attend schools.

Food was rationed for all civilians, but Jews got much smaller rations than others and were allowed to shop only at one special store. There usually was a long queue, and many people left empty-handed, as the store ran out of goods or the curfew hour approached. Sometimes we went hungry for several days.

Right after the seizure of Liepāja, the SD established itself at Kūrmājas avenue 21. That building acquired a sinister reputation, as people were tortured there. The chief, SS-Untersturmführer (lieutenant) Wolfgang Kügler, was assisted by Oberscharführer Carl-Emil Strott and Scharführers Handke, Holer, Schweig, Baumgartner, Reiche, Kaiser, Krapp, Sobeck, Michalsky, and others. Their main activity was systematic murder of Jews.

Naturally, the two synagogues in Kuršu street that had survived the assault of the town also had to be destroyed. The Nazis did not venture either to blow them up or to burn them, as they were located among numerous wooden houses. Instead, they forced Jews to demolish the synagogues. They drove Jews together in Kuršu street, who then pulled down the wooden synagogue Beis Midrash under supervision of policemen. Local people "salvaged" planks and logs. The Choral Synagogue, being built of stone, was a tougher task, requiring crowbars. In keeping with the spirit of the times, Jews from all walks of life were forced to do the job: dressmakers and physicians, cobblers and lawyers, all pressed into a wrecking crew. For the Nazis they were all the same: Jews. While demolishing the Choral synagogue, one man fell from the wall to his death. The others had to wait a few months for their turn to come.

[1]Translated from Russian by Helena Belova, edited by Edward Anders.

After the synagogues had been demolished, the SD carried the humiliation a step further. They unrolled the sacred scrolls on the Firehouse Square, and SS-Untersturmführer Kügler rode over them on horseback. The Jews, herded together from all parts of town, had to watch the Nazis desecrating their Torah.

There had been repeated mass arrests and executions of several dozen Jews at a time since the beginning of the occupation, carried out by firing squads of the SD and German police, with some help from the army and navy (who in any case furnished large numbers of spectators[2]). But apparently the pace was not fast enough, as the Arājs Commando, a team of Latvian volunteer killers, arrived from Rīga on 21 July in their notorious blue buses, and shot more than 600 Jews in a 3-day orgy of murder. Jews—mainly men over 16 but also some women and younger boys—were seized in the streets or apartments and then driven, with their hands up, to the execution site: the pre-1914 casemates near the lighthouse. Any resistance was punished by severe beatings. During that round-up, my father Yakov Feigerson was arrested and killed.

The arrests, though directed by German officials from the SS, Gestapo, and SD, were carried out by Latvian "self-defense" men (later renamed auxiliary police or "Schutzmänner"). I must point out that all the Latvian Schutzmänner who took part in the roundups (and later, executions) were volunteers. It was hard to believe that former friends had turned into heartless enemies, that some neighbors, who had been living next-door for years, were waiting for the moment when the Jews would be arrested in order to loot their home. Many who had the opportunity hastened to make a fortune out of Jewish blood. They snatched as much as they could; Jews were outlaws. We were proclaimed to be a criminal race deserving complete extermination.

A major factor was the relentlessly vicious anti-semitic propaganda, which blamed the Jews for everything. Allegedly it was the Jews who had run the hated Soviet government, especially the NKVD that had deported, tortured, and killed people. It was the Jews, not German bombs and shells, that had burned down much of the town center. (Inconveniently, some of the most heavily burned-out streets, such as Vītolu iela, had many Jewish resident, but a German police document[3] nicely rationalized this seeming paradox: the Jews had burned down their own houses out of spite, to deny them to the Germans.) The Protocols of the Wise Men of Zion were serialized in the daily paper, which also offered an explanation for occasional disappearances of children in past decades: the Jews had used their blood for matzos! Served this daily barrage of lies, people with stunted intellect or ethics could easily find rationalizations for murder, theft, or at least indifference.

The arrests and murders were nearly continuous. The Nazis hastened to eradicate the spirit of Judaism in this part of Hitler's empire, shooting well-known artists, scholars, athletes, etc. Among them were the composer and director of the local theater Walter Kahn, physician Aaron Schwab, choirmaster of the Choral synagogue Rabinovich, gabbai Joffe, and athlete Heske Levinstein.

I shall discuss Heske separately. His nemesis was the well-known Liepāja boxer Holcmanis, who had become a Latvian Schutzmann. Now he wanted to "settle scores" with his former competitors—Jews. More than once Heske Levinstein had defeated Holcmanis in the ring, and coaches had predicted a great future for him in boxing. Heske also was the only Jew who played for the local football team Olympia.

Now Holcmanis raised false charges against Heske with the SS. They arrested Heske and took him to town prison Nr. 2 (formerly the women's prison). Holcmanis met him in the prison yard and, together with other Nazis, pounced on him and started beating him severely. Heske realized this was the end. Gathering his last strength, he struck the boxer-policeman with a knock-out punch. When Holcmanis regained his consciousness, he shot Heske right on the spot, in the prison-yard.

The first mass shooting in the summer of 1941 was in Rainis Park, later ones were near the fishery port and the lighthouse or on the Naval base, and finally near the village of Šķēde, one kilometer north of the base on the Baltic coast. Then came the largest one, from 14 to 17 December, 1941, when 2,749 Jews were shot at Šķēde. It was ordered by the brutal police general Friedrich Jeckeln, newly appointed as Higher Police and SS-Chief for Ostland. He was to finish the job started by the Einsatzgruppen, and personally organized the killing of 24,000 Rīga Jews on 30 November and 8 December 1941 at Rumbula.

The Liepāja massacre, like most, had been planned and performed with German thoroughness, although the order had come only on 12 December. Latvian auxiliary police arrested the Jews and took them first to the women's prison and then to Šķēde, while German SD and Order Police oversaw matters in both places. In Šķēde, the Latvian auxiliary police contributed one firing squad; the other two were Latvian SD and a German platoon (Ezergailis, p.7 this volume).

The executions were avidly photographed by Carl-Emil Strott, the SD sergeant in charge (see photos on next page) who ran the operation with military precision. People were ordered to undress in the December cold (young women had to strip naked, older women only to their underwear), and Latvian policemen then led them to the ditch, where they stood facing the sea awaiting the firing squad's salvo. Most tumbled into the pit after being shot, but a Latvian policeman ("kicker") made the rounds from time to time and pushed bodies caught on the walls down into the pit.

The 15. 12. 1941 executions at Šķēde, photographed by SS Oberscharführer Strott. ❶ The Epstein family, partly undressed before execution: Sorella (10), hiding her face behind her mother Roza (43); an older relative or friend; Mia (18); her mother Emma (47). Roza's husband Jakob had been shot in early July; Emma's husband Haim had been arrested by the NKVD in January 1941 and died in June 1942 in Saratov province. Strott carried a whip, and when he asked people to pose, they posed. ❷ Mia, like other young women, had to undress fully, and is sitting on the ground. Her brother Max (15) is still undressing. Note Latvian SD and police, with their armbands and rifles, everywhere. ❸ Women running the gantlet. ❹ The victims stood at the edge of the ditch facing the sea, while the firing squad took aim. ❺, ❻ Most victims tumbled into the ditch, but those who didn't, were pushed in by a "kicker" (visible in pictures 5 and 6).

Strott's pictures were saved for posterity by an audacious Jew, David Zivcon, who worked as an electrician in the SD building. Once he was told to repair the electric wiring in Strott's apartment. Knowing that Strott had photographed the December massacre, David rummaged through the apartment until he found the 4 rolls of film. He smuggled them out, got a friend to make copies, and then returned the originals by faking a power failure as a pretext for reentering Strott's apartment. He buried the copies and turned them over to Soviet military intelligence after liberation. These pictures figured at the Nuremberg War Crimes Trial and have appeared in newspapers, books, and museum exhibits.

We—my mother, my younger brother, and I—were arrested at home on December 16 at about 2 AM. In those days, the widow and children of my paternal uncle Saul also stayed with us, as their house had been destroyed in the June battle for Liepāja. (Saul had been killed along with my father on 22 7 41).

The harsh sound of the door-bell, then blows at the door and shouts: "Open, or we'll break the door!" An SS-man burst into our apartment with six Latvian police: the German checks our names against the list, orders us to get dressed, take valuables with us, and leave the house. While we are getting ready, the policemen stuff everything that catches their eyes into their pockets.

When we were led out, it was dark in the street. We were taken to prison Nr. 2. When the convoy guard turned us over to the prison guard, he joked, "Here's another lot of Jews!" We went upstairs to the second floor. There sat a German SS-officer with two Latvian policemen. They told us to hand over our watches, money, rings, and any other valuables, and took the keys of our house as well. Our names were registered, and we were ordered to go back downstairs.

We found ourselves in the prison-yard, which was overcrowded with people. All of them were in hysterics: women were weeping and tearing their hair; children were crying; men were moaning, "This is the end!"

Among the crowd one could see Latvian policemen walking back and forth, beating people on their right and left with rubber truncheons. Jews were lined up in rows facing the wall. We had to stay there for hours without daring to turn around. If anybody crossed the yard to join his family for their last hour, the policemen immediately pounced on him and beat him with their truncheons.

At dawn they started to drive us onto trucks, shouting and beating us with rifle-butts. The trucks kept coming to the prison at frequent intervals. All that lasted until 10–11 o'clock. People were taken to the Šķēde dunes north of the Navy base. They were lined up at ditches previously dug by Soviet POWs and shot.

Suddenly an SD-officer appeared in the prison-yard. He was accompanied by a navy officer named Kroll, who was supervisor at the Korken-Fabrik (cork factory), where some Jews worked.

The SD-officer shouted, "Those who work at the Korken-Fabrik, step to the right!" People hastened to draw up in formation.

My mother grabbed my brother, me, and my cousin by the hand and joined that group; we had nothing to lose at that moment.

Escorted by the navy officer, we were let out of the prison-yard. On the way we succeeded in separating from the group. Soon we returned home.

The December shootings caused consternation among the local population. They saw people brought to the prison and then to the execution site. They saw the returning trucks loaded with clothes of the executed people. And some policemen, when drunk, bragged how they had killed women, children, and babies.[4]

On 11 February 1942, they came for us again, at 9 o'clock in the evening. My aunt and her children having been killed in December, we now shared the apartment with another family, the Silbermans. They had been evicted from their apartment to make room for a German officer. It was a family of three: husband Israel, wife Golde, and daughter Sheine, my classmate.

A German police officer checked everybody's names and ordered us to get dressed. Latvian police were combing the apartment, shoving everything they wanted into their pockets.

My mother called me up to her and whispered, "Sjoma, run away! Perhaps you'll find some friends who will help you."

I got dressed and stole to the exit. But a Schutzmann was on guard there, another one guarded the other exit. So I slipped into one of the back rooms, quietly opened the window, and jumped down into the yard from the second floor.

February of 1942 was snowy and cold. SS-Untersturmführer Kügler, who had allegedly been on leave during the December Aktion, himself took charge of the February shootings. He decided to send the victims to the execution site during the nightly curfew, to keep them out of people's view. Victims were arrested in the evening and taken to the women's prison. Under cover of darkness, they were sent to the execution site in horse-drawn sleighs.

[4]In his biweekly progress report of 3 January 1942, Kügler had noted with disappointment: "The execution of Jews carried out during the report period still is the conversation topic of the local population. The fate of the Jews is widely deplored, and thus far few voices have been heard in favor of the elimination of the Jews." (US Holocaust Memorial Museum manuscript RG–18.002M, file 83–1–22).

Only once did the doomed people succeed in escaping, as reported by sergeant Lietzau of the German Schutzpolizei[5]. On 15 February 1942 at about midnight, a 2-horse sleigh with 16 "evacuated" (the Nazi euphemism for killed or about-to-be-killed) Jews was heading for a casemate on the naval base under the guard of two Latvian policemen, corporals Kalē[js] and Mag[n]us. When they approached the corner of Rīgas and Rainis streets, the Jews tackled the policemen and threw them off the sleigh. They also hit the driver over the head with the lantern, so that he, too, fell from the sleigh.

Only at 1:15 a.m. did the bedraggled policemen report the incident to the officer-on-duty of the 21. police battalion. Several police patrols were promptly sent out to search for the fugitives, but with little success. Near the site of the incident they found a Jew who had been wounded in the head by a bullet and was unable to move. Finally, at 4:45 a.m. a guard at the cadet school discovered the sleigh, with a two-year-old Jewish child in it. Both the wounded man and the child were taken to the women's prison, presumably to be "evacuated" at the next opportunity.

The fugitives fared better, at least for the time being. After driving along the main street, the Jews jumped off the sleigh and whipped the horses, sending them running in the opposite direction. Then the fugitives split into several groups and dispersed. As the incident happened in Jaun-Liepāja (the new part of town, north of the harbor canal), one group of the people went to nearby Tirgus street 23, where Haim Kopman and the Hakel family lived. Kopman realized from the gentle knock at the door that these were not Nazis. He let them in and later led them to Hakel. When Hakel went to work early the next morning, he nonchalantly took them across the guarded bridge. Later the fugitives parted and stayed at different houses. Among them were Esja Horovitz, the teacher Abo Stolper with his wife Zara (née Matison) and son Shleima, as well as Jakob Merjam, who had hit the driver over the head with the lantern. Merjam is the only one who survived the war.

In the mid-February Aktion, 152 Jews were killed at Šķēde (Ezergailis, p.3 this volume). Among them were my mother Lyuba Feigerson (35), my younger brother Yossi Feigerson (5), and my cousin Reuven Traubin (6).

After my flight from our apartment I kept roaming about the town. But wherever I knocked, nobody let me in. After some hours of useless search I found myself near our house again. It was dark and still there. That night I made my way to Kuršu street where a Latvian family, the Evels, lived. My parents were on friendly terms with them. At the risk of their lives, the Evels hid me in their cellar. One week later, I went to town in search of any of my relatives. I found my mother's cousin Malka Munitz who lived in Tirgus laukums (Market square) with her two children. Her husband was killed together with my father in the Arājs Aktion of 22–24 July, 1941.

I stayed with the Munitz's for a while, working in a smithy in the Naval base. Across the street from the Munitz's house there was an inn where farmers in town for the market used to leave their horses. In its courtyard stood a small house. One of my classmates and his sister lived in one of its rooms. After work I often crossed the street (during Jewish curfew hours) and stayed at my friend's for hours. One day we heard the sound of a car engine, looked out the window and saw the notorious van nicknamed "Black Bertha". The van stopped at the Munitzs's house, which I had just left. Some minutes later the police led Malka Munitz (38) and her little children out.

It was clear that I could not stay there any longer. I ran into the apartment, picked up some necessities, and returned to my classmate. We were sure that a new shooting action had started. It was necessary to find another shelter. In the daytime we kept watching the street from the window, and at night we slept in the attic.

Nevertheless, the police (probably tipped off by a neighbor) seemed convinced that some Jews were hiding in the old inn. We watched them searching for us. They combed attic and cellar, piercing hay sheaves and even manure with their bayonets. We had to leave immediately and look for a new hiding place. We stayed either with Jews or with Latvians for a short while, but none of them dared give us shelter for long.

These arrests and murders continued until the opening of the ghetto. During one of the roundups, they arrested and sent to Šķēde Ida Fleishman, a running champion of the Makkabi sports club. She had already undressed and was being led to the pit when she suddenly started running in the direction of the Navy base. SD-Scharführer August Kaiser chased after Ida. He had also been an athlete in the past. But he failed to overtake the girl. She slipped into a building where German sailors hid her.

But Kaiser had seen what door she had run into and demanded that the sailors surrender her. Otherwise he threatened to call the Gestapo. "The Jewish girl ran so fast, like a deer. But she must not be left alive: she has seen too much," he explained to the sailors. In the end, they surrendered Ida, and Kaiser took her back to the execution site.

The December 1941 nd February 1942 executions had convinced the Jews of Liepāja that they were all doomed. From the early days of the occupation, families that did not want to undergo the humiliating execution procedure committed suicide by hanging, gas poisoning, or cutting their veins.

[5] Report of the 1. Police Precinct, 16. 2. 1942, Latvian State Historical Archives, P83-1-207, p. 112.

The April arrests and executions were timed to the Führer's birthday (20 April). The Liepāja SD caught Jews wherever they saw them and sent them straight to the execution site in Šķēde. That was how the teacher Abo Stolper and his wife (who had survived the memorable sleigh ride in February) were caught. This time there was no miracle; the Stolpers were killed.

In one of the trucks headed for Šķēde there was Shleime Havenson, a strong and brave young man. Shleime jumped off the moving truck and ran toward some bombed-out houses. He did not know that a passenger car with SD-men followed every such truck. They opened fire and wounded Shleime in the leg. He was delivered in fetters to the execution site.

As for me, my roaming continued until the very day the ghetto was opened, on 1 July 1942.

Solomon Feigerson at the Soviet-era monument in Šķēde (August, 1995). The inscription reads:

Here in 1941–45 the Hitlerite invaders killed in beastly manner more than 19,000 residents of Liepāja. IN ETERNAL MEMORY OF SOVIET PATRIOTS!

In Soviet tradition, the number is grossly exaggerated, and there is no mention of Latvian participation in the killings, or the fact that most victims were killed as Jews, not as Soviet patriots.

THE LIEPĀJA GHETTO

In the spring of 1942 the Liepāja newspaper "Kurzemes Vārds" reported: "The Jewish problem in Liepāja is completely solved. We got rid of the Jews. But if now and then we still find a Jew, we must show him the place he deserves." At the end of May 1942 the newspaper reminded the people: "It is necessary to dispose of the remaining Jews in our society!" It published an order requiring all Jews to move to a ghetto by 1 July.

By that time the majority of the Liepāja Jews had been shot. Among them were men who had fought for the independence of Latvia in the 1918–1920 war. People who had lived all their lives in that town—old men, women and children—were killed just for being Jews by birth. When fewer than 1,000 Jews remained of the original 7,100, the authorities announced that a ghetto would be set up—something that had never before existed in Liepāja.

A "Judenrat" was formed, headed by Solomon Izraelit and his assistant, lawyer Monya Kaganski. Both were respected men who were eager to help every Jew. All Jews had to register with the Judenrat and move to the ghetto. The German and local authorities allotted one city block for the ghetto, bounded by Kungu, Bāriņu, Dārza and Apšu streets. In that block, there were 13 houses, the inhabitants of which had previously moved into the apartments of executed Jews. Now Jews had to work on the construction of the ghetto in the evenings, after finishing their daily hard labor. They dug pits, put up posts, stretched barbed wire, and built a barbed wire fence around the ghetto, properly symbolizing their status.

The SD knew that the Jews had to be accommodated for only a short time while their labor was needed; after Germany's final victory, there would be no place for them in the "New Europe". Meanwhile, the housing problem caused by the ravages of the June 1941 siege could be alleviated by cramming the Jews into tighter quarters.

The Judenrat assigned dwellings to the people. The quota of 4 m^2/person was less than half the skimpy quota of Soviet times, and so several families had to be jammed into each apartment. Partitions were built in some rooms to provide every family with its own corner. The Jews had to work hard cleaning and repairing everything, as the apartments vacated by Latvian families were in dismal condition.

When I heard that Jews had started constructing the ghetto, I came out of my "den" and joined them. We were just putting up a fence when the foreman of the crew, David Zivcon, called me. He led me into a deserted house and began to search me, as somebody had told him I had a handgun. In those days I never parted with my gun, planning to use the first bullet for any German or Latvian who tried to search me, and the second one, for myself. I was 12 years old and clearly understood what was in store for me. Zivcon took my gun away, beat me severely, and ordered me to resume my work.

(Once after the war, when I chanced to meet David, I asked him, "Why did you beat me then?" "To scare you," he replied, "so you would keep your mouth shut about the gun").

Right on schedule, on 1 July 1942, the remaining 832 Liepāja Jews found themselves behind the barbed wire of the ghetto. About 650 women and children were among them. Corporal Kerschner from the Schutzpolizei was appointed commandant of the ghetto. When comparing his attitude with that of the Rīga commandant Krause, I think the Liepāja Jews were a bit luckier. The guards were Latvian auxiliary police. Everybody had to tell his number at the gate check-point when leaving the ghetto and returning. The guards kept watch over people, so that nobody could escape.

On coming to the ghetto, I (being alone) was accommodated in the hostel called "Junggesellen-Heim" (bachelors' hostel). That was a large room containing 20 beds. The inmates included some true bachelors (the war prevented some of them from settling down to married life) and some teenagers, but mainly people whose families had been killed while they were at work during an Aktion. The Nazis decided to spare some of them for the time being, as they were useful craftsmen.

Life in the ghetto commenced. In the morning the columns went to work through the main gate, in the evening the returning people were counted and searched at the gate.

The Jews did their best to help each other. Many had known the others from pre-war times. People managed to preserve human dignity under these trying circumstances. Even women had to work hard in the rain and snow. In bitter frost they carried bricks and did other kinds of hard work.

After a while, I was assigned to the group that worked on the farm attached to the SD. I had to pasture cows, sweep the yard, work in the garden, etc. As I was near the Nazis every day, I memorized their names for life: the head of the Liepāja SD, SS-Untersturmführer W. Kügler and his assistant, Oberscharführer C. Strott.

Every day a column of Jews headed for the SD building (at Kūrmājas avenue 21) to do their assigned jobs: shoemakers made boots, and the jeweler Michael Libauer remade golden articles (confiscated from Jews before execution) for the SS officials. Being a very talented person, David Zivcon was a specialist for optics and electricity as well as an expert on cars, for which the Nazis valued him.

My job included the following: I took the cows at the SD building and drove them to beautiful places on the coastline. Before lunch I brought them back for milking, then took them back till the end of the working day. If the weather was bad, I sometimes came back earlier; and then had to clean the cow-sheds, weed the grass in the garden, or wash cars. One of the motor-cars was called "Black Bertha". It carried the arrested Jews. Everybody in the town knew it—a van of Soviet manufacture, "GAZ-AA"—that transported people to the shooting site. Occasionally, after Jews had resisted their murderers, its body was stained with blood and splattered brains.

The food supply in the ghetto was quite inadequate. The trifling pay in occupation Reichsmarks was spent on rationed food in a special shop inside the ghetto. So as not to die of hunger, Jews tried to barter their belongings for bread and other food when working outside the ghetto. When moving into the ghetto, they had been able to take some of their belongings that had not been confiscated, and local people grasped quickly that for a piece of bread they could get something valuable from the Jews. However, it was dangerous to carry those foodstuffs into the ghetto.

Once the Germans detained Mrs. Berta Rubinstein at the gates of the ghetto on her return from work, presumably because she was trying to bring in some food for her children. Her family had arrived in Liepāja in August 1939, together with other refugees from Germany. Her husband Oskar had been arrested during the major Aktion in July 1941 (during which my father also fell in the hands of the Germans) and shot to death together with the other Jews. Mrs. Rubinstein, who by some miracle escaped the killings of 1941–42, came to the ghetto with her two little children. On the day after her arrest, SD-Scharführer Handke came to the ghetto and demanded that the head of the Judenrat, Mr. Israelit, give him Mrs. Rubinstein's children. Israelit led the boys to Handke's car. The children started to cry and begged uncle Israelit not to give them up, but let them wait till their mother returned. Handke got impatient, grabbed the boys, and threw them into the car. After a few days, we learned that the Nazis had shot Mrs. Rubinstein and her children.

In spite of all this, we somehow got accustomed to such a life. People managed to keep their folk wisdom, humor, and courage, but the hatred towards the enemy gradually built up. I don't remember exactly in what month, October or November, 1942 a rumor spread that in the next few days all the apartments would be searched. People got panic-stricken. They started to hide their more valuable things and threw away the foodstuffs they had bartered outside the ghetto, the very items one could otherwise only dream of. Kalman Linkemer described those days in his famous song "The Waste Bin". The searching was terrible. The ghetto looked as if after a pogrom.

Nevertheless, life—if one could call it that—went on. The ghetto Jews did the dirtiest jobs and still cherished the hope for survival.

One day it became known that the ghetto food shop had been robbed. For those times that was an extraordinary event—Jews had robbed Jews. The Germans arrested and shot the robbers.

At the end of October 1942, some Jews from the Rīga ghetto were transported to the Liepāja ghetto, among them Jews from different countries—Lithuania, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Austria, and Germany. They were sent to work at the Liepāja sugar factory. The sugar-beet crop was quite large in 1942, but there was a shortage of workers in the factory, as most local Jews had already been killed.

The new arrivals told us of the massacres of Rīga and European Jews in late 1941, in which about 30,000 Jews were killed. The first mass murder occurred on 30 November, 1941. People were driven on foot from the ghetto to the execution site in the Rumbula forest, about 10 km away. It was cold and dark, the road was covered with ice, and many people stumbled and fell. Others walking at their side caught them and dragged them along. Still, some people were left behind, and were shot by the Latvian police escorts, who kept driving the others while shouting: "Faster, faster, or we'll shoot". The place on the edge of the forest, to which long columns of the Jews—men, women and children—were driven, was cordoned off by German soldiers and Latvian police. At daybreak, they started the killing.

For such massacres, Jews from the occupied countries of Europe and from Germany proper had been brought to Latvia. Both the Germans and their local collaborators became notorious as specialists in killing people. Besides shootings, gas vans were used for this purpose. The sites of mass murder were: the railway station Šķirotava and the Biķernieku and Rumbula forests in the outskirts of Rīga.

The Liepāja Jews greeted the newcomers like relatives, sharing their last food and clothes with them, inviting them to their homes. Every meeting of that kind started with stories relating to their native homes where they had lived before the Nazis came to power.

The work at the sugar factory was very hard, in three shifts. The Jews from the Rīga ghetto worked in Liepāja until February 1943, when they were transported back to Rīga. The parting was not easy; people knew what awaited them. The tailor Gurevich even wrote a song in Yiddish to the music of "Centralka" (The Rīga Central prison):

> "Rīga townsfolk, you favored us with gleams of happiness,
> We won't ever forget how we were together, during all those hard days."

Life in the ghetto continued. People went out to work at dawn and returned late at night. One needed additional strength for housekeeping. We illegally listened to the radio in the ghetto, spreading the news by word of mouth, and thus knew about the German defeat at Stalingrad in January-February 1943. But we had no inkling of the uprising in the Warsaw ghetto in April 1943.

The plaque inside the former Liepāja ghetto:
Between Kungu, Apšu, Dārza, and Bāriņu streets
from 1 July 1942 to 8 October, 1943
was the ghetto for the doomed Liepāja Jews

There were lots of courageous people in the Liepāja ghetto. Being completely isolated from the rest of the world, the Jews lived like one family, rendering support to one another, sometimes even at the risk of their lives.

After the revolt in the Warsaw ghetto, Himmler decreed that all the ghettos in the occupied territories should be liquidated. In the second half of September 1943, ghetto commandant Kerschner announced that the remaining Jews would be transported to Rīga. There were rumors in the ghetto that this was a prelude to complete extermination; people got worried. On 3 October 1943 two couples—David and Henni Zivcon, Michael and Hilda Skutelsky—managed to escape from the ghetto to a courageous man, Roberts Sedols, who had prepared his cellar as a long-term shelter for Jews. Some time later the four escapees were joined by Aaron Vesterman, Zelik Hirschberg, Kalman Linkemer, Misha Libauer, Yosif Mendelstam, and Shmerl Skutelsky. Altogether Roberts Sedols provided shelter to eleven people, but he himself did not live to see the end of the war: he was killed by shrapnel in March 1945.

On 8 October 1943 the inhabitants of the Liepāja ghetto were ordered to gather at the gate with their belongings early in the morning. The Jews, from children to old men, were drawn up in a column and driven to the local train station, under escort of SD-men and Latvian police. Freight cars were waiting for them. After driving the last Jew onto the train, SD Scharführer Handke put up a sign on the station wall: "Libau Judenfrei!" (Liepāja free of Jews!)

For this final expulsion the Nazis chose the most sacred day of the Jewish people: Yom Kippur.

KAISERWALD (MEŽAPARKS)

Mežaparks, one of the most beautiful districts of Rīga, is situated in a pine forest. In 1911 Czar Nicholas II rested there for some time. He was delighted with it and highly praised the beauty of the forest. Thus the place was named "Czar's Forest" in his honor, translated into German as "Kaiserwald".

But in June 1943 the Germans decided to build a concentration camp under the name "Kaiserwald" in that picturesque place. That summer, the first groups of prisoners were brought there from the KZ Sachsenhausen to start construction of the new camp. They were mostly Poles and Germans who had been sentenced to long terms for robberies or murders.

The construction was done rather quickly under supervision of the SD and SS, which they had great experience in building concentration camps. The camp covered an area of about 0.5 km^2. It was enclosed with barbed wire and lit with small lamps at night. Behind the fence there stood evenly spaced watch-towers. The prisoners were led in and out through the main gates.

Kaiserwald opened already in September 1943, to implement Himmler's decree of 21 June, 1943 on the liquidation of all ghettos in the occupied eastern territories. That decree was issued after the Warsaw ghetto uprising, and required all able-bodied Jews to be deported from ghettos to concentration camps.

Commandant of the Kaiserwald concentration camp was SS-Sturmbannführer (major) Woldemar Sauer. Kaiserwald was intended to be a forced labor camp rather than an extermination camp, but the working and living conditions of the prisoners were conducive to their extermination. Hard work, cold, and hunger sowed death. The working day had no formal limits, it lasted for 12–14 hours or even longer.

At the head of the concentration camp was a headman appointed by the commandant. He was the person representing the camp to the SS officials. This headman was a German who had been deported to Kaiserwald from KZ Sachsenhausen. Allegedly he had been sentenced to life imprisonment for murder.

On the night from 8 to 9 October 1943, the Jews from the Liepāja ghetto arrived in Kaiserwald. It was dark, so people had no idea where they had been taken. Soon guards opened the freight cars' sliding doors and drove us out with shouts and curses. We could not see the locality as our eyes were blinded by bright searchlights. After deboarding, all the Jews from Liepāja, approx. 800 persons, were driven into a single barrack, where we spent the night in extreme congestion.

Already on the next day, selection started. We were awakened early, although we hardly had a wink of sleep all night. At the crack of dawn a bell pealed, and there appeared a German prisoner nicknamed "Mr. X". With fists and a stick he started "acquainting" us with the camp regulations while shouting, "Hurry up! You are in a concentration camp, not a rest home!"

Soon the camp authorities appeared, headed by commandant Sauer and his assistants Oberscharführer Wiesner, Scharführer Brüner, and Rottenführer Hirsch. A big truck with a trailer drove up to our formation. The Jews were divided into three groups:

- Elderly people, women with children;
- Women and teenage girls over 14;
- Men and teenage boys over 14.

The selection was carried out by the headman, the heads of the blocks, Mr. X, Hannes, Mikusch, and other German prisoners. Those sadists told the women that they need not follow their children if they wanted to save their lives. But the women refused to part with their children, and headed for the trucks instead. Later it became known that the transport with the elderly men, women and children went to the Rīga ghetto, took on some more people, and left for Auschwitz.

The camp wailed. It seemed that the earth trembled with their cries and sobs. Men groaned indistinctly, feeling their helplessness.

After selection and registration, the Liepāja Jews were sent to work in different camps in Latvia. Under camp Kaiserwald there were about a dozen affiliated branches: ABA, Balastdambis, Strazdumuiža, AEG, TVL, Reichsbahn, and others. Most of the Jews transported from Liepāja were assigned to the Reichsbahn. Doctors Plotkin and Baron were summoned from the men's group. Later we heard a rumor that on special orders of the SD, they had been sent to a penalty camp near Tartu (Estonia), where they perished.

I remained in Kaiserwald. I was assigned to block No. 1 where the Blockführer was Hannes, a German criminal (under life imprisonment for bank robberies in Hamburg). He always shouted at the prisoners and beat them unmercifully.

When I first came upon him in his block, he explained to me how I should behave and added that he did not wish to see me any more that day. To avoid troubles, it would be best if I disappeared from his sight. He showed me my bunk; one prisoner was already lying there. All newcomers were distributed at the rate of 2–3 persons for each bunk of the 3-tiered bunk beds. The barracks were in terrible condition. Linens were not changed for months. There was a foul smell and countless fleas and bedbugs. The gloom made it hard to see what was going on around us. The unsanitary condition of the barracks caused mass diseases. Still, the worst was yet to come.

Towards morning, bells chimed, followed by shouts of the Stubendienst (orderlies), who roused us with blows on the head. Then we heard Hannes, who burst into the barracks with his stick, shouting, "Damned Jews, you are still here!" These words were addressed to the people who had not managed to run out and join the formation. Having jumped out of their beds, the prisoners had to run half-naked to the wash-stands in the cold autumn air. The people were weak from hunger and hard work. Later on, many prisoners stopped washing themselves, so as not to catch the eyes of Hannes and his brutal Stubendienst assistants.

We hardly had time to drink our morning "coffee" before hearing the new command, "Zum Appell!" (To roll call!). We had to run out and form ranks of five. There we stood for a long time. At last we heard the command, "Attention! Caps off!" The Blockführer reports to SS-Scharführer Brüner that the prisoners of block No. 1 are drawn up for roll call. After the counting was finished, came the command "Caps on!" The prisoners lined up to leave for work. The remaining people, including me, marched to the Arbeitsamt (labor office), headed by the German prisoner Schlüter. The entire group was assigned to work in the section Anoden (anodes) to dismantle electric batteries.

The barracks where we worked was on the other side of the camp fence. We were under the charge of an army corporal, who watched us do everything as prescribed. Our working day lasted until dark, but on returning to the camp, we were sometimes ordered to do some additional work inside the camp "for its improvement".

At lunch-time we went to the camp in formation, to receive a scoop of so-called soup. In the evening we could even buy a piece of bread or butter from other prisoners, if we had money. Hunger constantly reminded us of itself. The rations were so small that people could hardly move their legs. That's why many prisoners quickly became goners and died.

Once, during lunch break, a Kapo from the plumbing workshop approached me and asked to clean a sewer-pipe. Thanks to my small height I managed to squeeze through it. That was how I started working for that Kapo, cleaning sewage systems in different parts of the camp. Time and again, I even asked to be sent somewhere, for example, to the SS kitchen, where one could acquire some food, though at considerable risk. When working there, I stuffed everything I could into my tool box. Besides, my new job enabled me to move around the camp without any restrictions, so I could find myself in proper time at the place where bread was distributed. With adroitness, one could snatch a couple of loaves of bread, but if one was caught... Before my eyes, an SS guard beat a Jew half-dead for taking a piece of bread.

Once a guard standing at the gate between two zones called me. I took off my cap and reported that I worked for the plumbing shop. He ordered me to find a man who could repair his cigarette-case. That required solder, which was not available in the camp workshop. However, outside the barbed wire fence there was a large scrap-heap, where, among other things, there were metal cartridge boxes of Soviet manufacture. By heating such a box in a fire, one could get sufficient solder for the repair. I explained this to the SS guard, who got me a cartridge box. I made a fire and started heating the box. Camp commandant Sauer found me at that work. He understood at once what I was doing, and just asked where I had obtained the box. I told him, and Sauer ordered me to collect all the cartridge boxes that lay scattered all over the scrap-heap, and bring him all the extracted solder. That was how I got a job for a while.

Meanwhile, the amount of work in the camp workshop gradually diminished, and they started to transfer people to mixed work groups. Having consulted with a Kapo, I applied to the Arbeitsamt office and asked them to send me to work at the labor camp Reichsbahn (State Railways), where one of my relatives was imprisoned. The Kapo from our workshop, a German Jew, helped many prisoners. He taught me how to behave in camp: how to feign hard work and how to warn others of a coming danger (by using the secret command, "Shisho"). Thanks to that man, I soon found myself in the labor camp Reichsbahn.

At the end of 1943, many trains started delivering Jews to Kaiserwald. I recall one such train from Daugavpils. The newcomers had brought many things with them, but everything was taken away on their arrival. A selection was held right away. Old people, women, and infants were loaded on a truck and driven away. Nobody ever saw them again, and there was a rumor that all those unfortunate people were killed in the Rumbula forest. The SS officer leading that murder operation was the Latvian Viktors Arājs, who already had tens of thousands of Jews on his conscience. The selection was done under supervision of: commandant Sauer, Oberscharführer Wiesner, Scharführer Brüner, Rottenführer Hirsch ,as well as the permanent participant in all atrocities against Jews—a German criminal nicknamed Mr. X.

One should speak of him separately. He had been sentenced to a long prison term for murder and sent to KZ Buchenwald. Mr. X was obliged to bear the black triangle sign of a criminal on his clothes. Already in his first concentration camps—Buchenwald and Dachau—Mr. X became a specialist in humiliating and taunting Jews; later on he was transferred to Kaiserwald. There he was appointed a Kolonnenführer, i. e., head of a work team. He made the Jews toil without any break, he found fault with every trifle, and beat them within an inch of their lives. There was no evil deed—selection, robbery, or murder—in the camp in which that sadist had not participated.

At the beginning of 1944, when the front-line approached the Latvian border, the terror in our camp became even more severe. Every day a man-hunt was held. Jews were seized during roll-call, on their return from work, or at work. These unfortunate people were loaded on trucks and taken away, as the SS guards joked, on a "trip to heaven".

I witnessed one of those cases. The Germans thought there was still some space left in the trucks that needed to be filled. At that moment a column of prisoners returned from work and approached the gates. The guards stopped them, counted the required number of men, and chased them to the Schreibstube (registry office). An SS guard and a German prisoner named Schlütter accurately wrote down the names of the doomed. Then they forced them onto the truck with rifle-butt blows. As usual, Mr. X was on hand to render assistance.

Breathless, I stood with the other Jews in formation and watched the event when I heard the voice of the camp headman, "And why are you standing like a sack? Are you waiting to be taken away as well?" In a wink of an eye I had mingled with the crowd, that time luckily.

Here is another case. It happened after my transfer from Kaiserwald to its branch, the labor camp Reichsbahn. Once commandant Sauer decided to get rid of all the children-prisoners. One of the prisoners, a Jew from Liepāja I had made friends with, was an eye-witness to that event and told me about it in the camp Stolp in 1944.

One evening a general roll call was announced; all prisoners were obliged to attend. As a rule, the privileged prisoners, such as cooks, clerks, assistants of the block Kapo (all Germans or Poles), were free not to attend roll calls. But that time everybody was driven there. After the roll call, one could hear the commands near every block:

- First row, two steps forward!
- Second row, two steps forward!
- Fifth row, two steps back!
- Fourth row, one step back!

That kind of formation enabled the SS guards to move easily along the rows of prisoners and examine everybody thoroughly. That night many SS men had arrived, their number was unusual. Walking along the lines, the Nazis yanked children and teenagers out of the line and drove them to the trucks that stood nearby. The children knew what awaited them and tried to flee. But both the SS guards and German prisoners chased like hounds after the Jewish children. When caught, children were beaten and thrown inside the guards' cordon. Among the victims was my friend Moishele from Vilnius. The boy was 13, and had previously managed to escape three times. But this time Mr. X caught Moishele and dragged him to the truck.

A father stood in one of the lines with his 12-year-old son; they had been inseparable during those dreadful years. An SS guard approached them and screamed, "You are still standing here, aren't you? Come on! Hurry up to the truck!" The boy cried out, "Papa! Papa!", stretching out his arms towards his father who remained in the column. The SS guards had dragged the boy almost up to the group of Jewish children under guard. At that moment everybody heard the man's cry. The father overtook the boy, squeezed his hand and walked to the truck beside his son. He was a tall, strong man, and stood majestically among the children, like a king amid his subjects.

In the autumn of 1944, when the front-line already approached Rīga, only a few hundred Jews remained in Kaiserwald. Most of them were doing hard work in the sea-port. Ships were unloaded mainly at night due to air-raids. The Nazis needed to resupply their weapons and ammunition, and now were forced to use the Reich's enemies—Jews from Kaiserwald and its branches—to unload the weapons.

Among them were my fellow-townsmen from Liepāja, Lyova Danenberg and Max Schwarz. I used to live together with them in the Junggesellen-Heim in the Liepāja ghetto. Max was a gifted man, and at age 21 had earned the degree of mechanical engineer. In May 1944, both young men were transferred to Kaiserwald from the labor camp Paplaka, which the Nazis planned to liquidate. They started to work in the garage. Both men were experts in car repair, and camp commandant Sauer highly valued their skills. Mr. X resented that the men were favored by the commandant, and took them under his "guardianship". The young men trusted that scoundrel, not knowing that he spied on everybody. He intercepted and nosed out everything, hoping to earn a reduction of his sentence. Mr. X never thought the Nazis might lose the war, and that he would have to answer for everything he had done. He made plans with Danenberg and Schwarz for a joint escape. They arranged to seek shelter in the nearest cemetery. There they might hide for a while and then reach the front-line, which had almost approached the outskirts of Rīga. One day before the liquidation of Kaiserwald, Danenberg and Schwarz managed to escape. For whatever reason, Mr. X stayed behind at the last minute. Then, when the Nazis detected the escape the following morning, he volunteered to help them find the fugitives. Soon both men, surrounded by SS guards and dogs, were escorted back to the KZ. And commandant Sauer shot Lyova Danenberg (23) and Max Schwarz (26) personally, in front of the formation.

Some words about the SS butchers of Kaiserwald. Oberscharführer Wiesner served as a medical orderly in Kaiserwald, being assistant of the chief medical officer SS-Sturmbannführer Krebsbach. Before arriving at Kaiserwald, Wiesner had already acquired much experience in Stutthof and some other concentration camps, which was duly appreciated by his principals. This medical orderly became close to Kaiserwald commandant Sauer, and was entrusted with medical experiments on sick prisoners who came to the infirmary. I last saw him in June 1944 at the labor camp Reichsbahn.

The Nazis decided to confiscate all civilian clothing of the imprisoned Jews that these still kept in the camp, to barter them for food with local people. All the SS officials from Kaiserwald came to Reichsbahn. The prisoners, men and women, were herded inside the biggest barracks, and then the selection started. Elderly and weak people were separated and soon taken away. Nobody ever saw them again. The selection was carried out under the supervision of the same Oberscharführer Wiesner.

The remaining prisoners were driven into another corner of the barracks, and their hair was cropped close. Men and women were ordered to undress, after that everybody was given striped prison-garb.

In October 1984 I was invited to a trial in Düsseldorf, to testify on the mass murder of prisoners, mainly Jews, in the Kaiserwald concentration camp. The defendant, the 64-year old former SS-Oberscharführer Wiesner, was charged with participation in murder. The Düsseldorf court found him guilty of crimes against humanity and sentenced him to 6 years' imprisonment.

Scharführer Brüner was a sadist. He nagged at every trifle, especially during roll-calls. If he did not like something, the prisoners were severely punished. During the evening roll call, he would detain people for hours, drilling and taunting them until they swooned. When the front approached in 1944, Brüner started to torment people with even greater zeal. At that time escapes had become more frequent. Those few Jews who had some connections with local people occasionally managed to escape to specially prepared shelters. In order to prevent the escapes, the Nazis began to take hostages.

I remember the following case. After the successful escape of one Jew (which had been thoroughly prepared beforehand), Scharführer Brüner arrived at the camp. We were all drawn up for roll call. Accompanied by several SS officers, Brüner started to walk slowly along the formation lines, choosing victims to be punished for that escape. He scrutinized every prisoner's eyes, making him dumb with fear. And when that man was ready to step out of the line, Brüner's finger pointed to the man next to him. That time he selected over 20 people. They were put under guard right away. The rumor spread in the Reichsbahn that the hostages selected by Brüner had been sent to Stützpunkt (literally, "stronghold"). Only after the war, when I met other survivors, did I find out what the code name "Stützpunkt" meant. Healthy Jewish prisoners were forced to dig up mass graves and burn the bodies.

All the people who had been sent to do that job were put into chains. Those who got weak were burned together with the corpses. Nobody ever left the Stützpunkt alive. These eyewitnesses were killed to conceal the crimes of the Nazis. All these facts were confirmed in the trial against Wiesner.

Rottenführer Hirsch was mainly in charge of the warehouse, but he also took an active part in atrocities at Kaiserwald. The newly-built warehouse barracks had shelves and hangers for clothes. All the belongings taken from newly arriving Jews went to the stores. A number of prisoners worked there under the supervision of Hirsch, sorting the items. All kinds of things were there. The sorters put into separate boxes photographs, nails, shoe soles, new and worn clothes, medical devices, various instruments, linen, overcoats, shoes, and foodstuffs. Hirsch kept vigilant watch over the sorters, so that they did not steal anything. They put all the items on shelves, arranging them beautifully, so that the warehouse looked more like a first-class shop. When the working day was over, the workers were searched. Anybody found to have concealed something was severely punished. That shop was a free shopping center for the SS gentlemen and other select people.

Kaiserwald functioned from June 1943 till October 1944. Its horrible reality gradually turned into remote, terrible reminiscences. No matter how many years will pass, we, those few prisoners who have survived concentration camps, will never forget the death cries of innocent people who had been caught by the Nazi conveyor of death.

STUTTHOF

Stutthof lies on the coast of the Baltic Sea, 45 km east of Gdansk. Before 1939 it was a remote place, a small town like thousands of others in Germany. An asphalt highway and a narrow-gauge railway connected it with Gdansk.

In 1939 Stutthof suddenly began to stir. In autumn, just after the end of the war against Poland, several hundred prisoners arrived there under escort of an SS detachment. They were mainly Poles who were destined for death. Tents were put up, which marked the beginning of the concentration camp Stutthof. Just as in all other concentration camps, nobody was to know what was happening in Stutthof behind the barbed wire.

The condemned men felled the forest, rooted out stumps, drained marshes, rammed the earth, blasted rocks, carried stones and sand, erected barracks, and constructed a huge stone mansion intended for the Commandant's office and the camp authorities. The KZ was planned to be grandiose, big enough to accommodate over 100,000 prisoners.

The Nazis organized the KZ according to the principle, divide and rule. Each person brought there was, sooner or later, doomed to death. Constant hunger, beating, exhausting hard labor would do their part, if not sudden murder by an SS guard, Kapo, block headman. A prisoner could not feel safe anywhere at any time.

There were 22 main concentration camps like this one in Nazi Germany and the occupied territories. In addition, their satellite camps numbered over 2000. The soil of the camps is soaked with the blood and covered with the ashes of tortured people.

Stutthof is one of these devil's places; 80,000 people were there. For a long time the heads and organizers of mass executions in Stutthof were the camp commandants, SS Obersturmbannführer (Lt. colonels) Hoppe and Mayer.

Before 1944 there were no Jews in Stutthof. When the front-line approached the Baltic countries, the Nazis tried to erase the traces of their crimes: those people who had survived by some miracle were deported to the inner regions of Germany for extermination. "Juden" began to fill Stutthof. The first were Lithuanian Jews from the Šiaulai and Kaunas ghettos.

I arrived in KZ Stutthof by ship on 9 August, 1944. Our transport brought prisoners from the Rīga concentration camp Kaiserwald, as well as prisoners from several work groups. Among them was my work group from Reichsbahn.

Registration started the morning after arrival. We were called to the table one by one; a Polish prisoner wrote down our answers to the questionnaire. We had to stand at attention and answer in a clear and loud voice:

- Name, surname, family status, occupation, and address?
- Offense? That line was filled in without waiting for the answer: Jude.

We were given numbers with the yellow-and-black Star of David and warned not to lose or forget it. The number of our transport began with 56, so my camp number was 56642. As we arrived in striped garb, the camp authorities understood that we had already been robbed in the previous camp. We were made to pass through a bath, have our hair cut, and jump into a barrel with some liquid. Only after that did we get prison garb, onto which we had to sew the camp number immediately.

In August-September 1944 there were about 50,000–60,000 prisoners in Stutthof. They were divided into categories according to their offenses, and wore triangles of the respective colors on their chests and trouser-legs.

Criminals had a green triangle. They were mainly Germans, and enjoyed privileges. Most of them had been imprisoned for robberies or murders. Many of these people had on their conscience at least several lives, and yet they held key positions in the camp.

I remember well one German, a Kapo from the crematorium, called "green Willy" (for the color of his triangle). When there was a shortage of corpses in the crematorium, Kapo Green Willy made the rounds, followed by his "Totenkommando". They loaded onto their carts all weak, apathetic people from the barracks and the dead that lay in the so-called "wash-room". In that room were stored the deceased—people who had been tortured or died during the previous night—to be taken to the crematorium.

Political prisoners comprised the largest category of the prisoners in Stutthof. They had red triangles and were sentenced to imprisonment until the end of the war. Among them were Germans, Norwegians, Latvians, Lithuanians, and especially Poles, who formed the majority of political prisoners. In general, all prisoners, except us, were considered political. Jews were brought to Stutthof only for extermination.

ROLL-CALL IN STUTTHOF

Such was the evening scene of camp life in Stutthof. Next to every block its inmates are taught the regulations of Stutthof, under supervision of a Blockführer. First of all, we novices exercise through the commands: "Caps off!" and "Caps on!" A prisoner must tear his cap off and slap his leg with it, so that it sounds like a pistol shot. God forbid, if the Blockführer does not like the way his command was executed.

Having passed through KZ Kaiserwald, we already knew the rules of making a formation: everybody must line up with the people next to and in front of him, while keeping his eye on the Blockführer who is making his rounds of the lines, counting the prisoners, cursing and beating them.

The evening roll call lasts several hours. The usual reason for that is a discrepancy in the count of the several tens of thousands of prisoners. But sometimes a whole block of prisoners must stand for a long time, for other, unknown reasons. Between the rows, the SS guards and the Blockführer poke about, administering blows thick and fast on the people in formation. It is a rare day if an evening roll call passes without an incident.

Finally, the evening meal is brought. Only after the Blockführer and his assistants have taken generous helpings of bread with margarine and jam, is the remaining food shared equally, depending on the number of the prisoners in the block.

Dinner usually consists of a watery vegetable soup made of roots, cabbage, and turnips. It is dispensed at the entrance to the block. Junior assistants of the Kapo do that, with customary sadism.

Before the meal is served, all the prisoners are driven out and lined up. The assistant of our Blockführer, a Pole, lines up the queue with blows of a scoop on the heads. Once I also chanced to get a blow and then had to stay in the queue, with my head bleeding, to get my portion of soup.

One morning we (the people who had arrived from the work group Reichsbahn, Rīga) were checked against the roll, counted, and escorted to the railway station. From there we were deported by train to the labor camp in the town of Stolp (Pomerania). Compared with Stutthof, conditions were a bit easier there, though with no less cruelty. I'll never forget how we were herded together to watch the execution of seven of our fellow inmates. The execution was presided over by the SS officials of the town and the camp commandant. The bodies of the victims were left hanging in the very workshop where we worked.

In February and March 1945 artillery fire was heard in Stolp. Sometimes we heard the drone of airplanes flying to bomb Germany. The camp commandant ordered increased vigilance by the guards. One day, all of a sudden, a train drove up. We boarded the freight cars and headed in an unknown direction. As it turned out later, the commandant had decided to send us back to Stutthof. On our way there, we were able to see how Hitler's Reich was collapsing.

RETURN TO STUTTHOF

Thus I found myself in Stutthof for the second time in the middle of March 1945. Most of the prisoners had already been evacuated somewhere. The barracks stood half-empty.

Now that the war had reached German soil, the most impudent and cruel SS guards and their camp accomplices were depressed. The Blockführer and his assistants were a little quieter and not so nagging any more. Even the routine of the roll call differed from that of 1944, although the evening roll-calls were still long. We felt tension increasing in the camp. The cannonade became louder and more distinct, and the rumors of the coming liberation were more persistent.

We talked a lot about the expected liquidation of the Stutthof camp. All over the camp, near every barracks, barrels filled with tar had appeared. It became clear, the Nazis were going to cover up the tracks of their atrocities in Stutthof. But what would become of us? There were rumors that the remaining prisoners would be executed, that special detachments of the German criminal prisoners were being formed for that purpose. They were called the "torch men".

On 25 April 1945 the order was given to evacuate the remaining inhabitants of the camp. We were given provisions before leaving: a loaf of bread for three persons (normally it was shared among ten people) and a pack of margarine for two. People were awakened early that day, it was still dark. We were drawn up, counted quickly and brought under escort to the train platform, where open cars with low sides already awaited us.

Boarding went quickly, but we were packed so tightly in the freight cars that we could only stand. The narrow-gauge train brought us to the right bank of the Vistula. There we encountered other prisoners from Stutthof who had been driven there on foot. It was a group of Scandinavians and people from other countries of Europe. They were mainly political prisoners. I particularly remember the Norwegians, as I and many others owe them our lives.

They had been arrested in Norway and, without investigation or trial, deported straight to Stutthof. In general, they lived in better conditions than the rest of the prisoners. They did not wear prison-clothes, and they received big parcels from the Norwegian and Swedish Red Cross. The camp authorities treated them differently, hoping to re-educate them "in the spirit of National Socialism".

At home, in their country, these Norwegians had been persons of high rank. Many of them were educated at higher education establishments. Among them were university professors and policemen. They had refused to serve the Germans and swear allegiance to Germany. "We have already sworn allegiance to our king," they explained, "and we Norwegians are men of honor".

After the two groups had joined, we were brought to Hel (a town on a spit in the Gulf of Gdansk) under SS escort. There all the prisoners embarked on barges. A whole flotilla of barges was formed, carrying the Stutthof prisoners under convoy of SS guards. Tugboats took the barges in tow, and towed us to the open sea. That is how on 25 April 1945 we started our voyage on board the barge "Wolfgang".

I had eaten my travel provisions on the spot, and could only dream of food after that.

A week later, on 2 May at night, we suddenly found that the convoy and the tugboat had abandoned us, leaving us on the open sea at the mercy of fate. It was then that the Norwegians showed their worth. They took charge of saving our lives. First of all, they took measures to protect the barge from the numerous floating mines. Then we made paddles and sails of boards and blankets. Thus we succeeded in bringing the barge to shore on 3 May, 1945.

We found two small boats there and began to disembark. We were on shore near the town of Neustadt in Holstein, more than 500 km west of Hel and Gdansk.

The prisoners' condition was terrible! Most of the Jews had had no food since our departure from Hel. Many were not able even to raise themselves from their places.

Suddenly a group of German sailors appeared on the shore. They took our boats away and began to drive us off the barge. They forced people to jump into the water and get to the shore on their own. Those miserable people who could not even move were shot right on the spot.

The sailors were still young men, but they shot the prisoners like experienced murderers. I recall the brothers Abram (15) and Meier (18) Epstein who had survived all the horrors of Nazi persecution and now were killed by these youngsters, just a few hours before liberation. A young Nazi had shot one of the brothers on the beach, and when the other cried out, "Why? What for?" the same German killed the other Epstein too.

Before my eyes they killed Yasha Rabinovich (42). The shrapnel wounds he received during the air-raid over the KZ Burggraben (where we had stayed for some time on our way back to Stutthof) would not close up. When Yasha got off the barge and reached land, he could not get up on his feet and remained sitting on the ground. A young German sailor came up to him and shot him in the head. That happened only a few hours before liberation.[6]

Yasha Rabinovich had written a song devoted to the liquidation of the Liepāja ghetto, and Shura Valdstein composed music to it.

A little later came the SS guards from the convoy that had escorted the flotilla of Stutthof prisoners. We were made to form a column again. Half-dead people were roused, with curses and beating. Those who were not able to stand up were killed on the spot. The column was driven to the assembly drill-ground. We could hear shots behind and in front of us—they finished off the fallen ones.

We had no idea how long we kept moving that way. When we heard the command to stop, I simply dropped to the ground.

We were driven to a stadium, where soup was being distributed. All those who had received a scoop of the liquid were gathered in columns and driven to the port, to board a ship. Being an experienced prisoner, I knew one should not hurry, and decided to line up for another portion of soup.

Meanwhile, it started to rain heavily. The food distribution was stopped. After the rain a heavy raid by British planes began. It lasted rather long. When everything became quiet, I suddenly saw the guards and the SS convoy taking off. I could not grasp what was happening until I saw British tanks.

I was free at last!

Never in life does one experience more beautiful times than in adolescence. But my generation was deprived of its youth. The Nazis had ruined it and robbed us of our dearest and brightest.

Nevertheless, I was lucky—I had outlived Hitler's "Thousand-Year Reich".

THE TERRIBLE BUT UNFORGOTTEN PAST

On 8 May, 2000 the anti-Hitler coalition celebrated the 55th anniversary of victory over Hitler Germany.

Everybody who experienced and survived that terrible time, will remember that day forever. The war finally ended. Fifty-five years have passed since the end of that horror.

[6]The names of 48 victims, including 6 from Liepāja, are contained in a somewhat incomplete "List of Jews killed at Neustadt by German Army 2 5 45," May 1945, Państwowe Muzeum Stutthof, Z-V-36. The victims are buried in a cemetery in Neustadt.

They say, time heals old wounds. Still, there are wounds that keep bleeding and do not let one forget the evil that had been inflicted.

Is it ever possible to forget the crimes committed by Hitler and his gang?

Is it ever possible to calm down and say, "Yes, that was an evil dream, a nightmare that will never be repeated"?

That is why we, those who were condemned to pass through all the circles of the Nazi hell, which had many names, must keep that memory and remind all mankind of the tragedy of our nation.

First place in the devil's list belongs to Auschwitz, the second one to Treblinka, with its bloody ballast. Then come Bergen-Belsen, Chelmno, Sachsenhausen, Ravensbrück, Neuengamme, Flossenburg, Stutthof, Dora, Mauthausen, and all the others.

The ground of the camps is covered with the ashes of millions of people who had been killed by exhaustion at forced labor or on the roll-call grounds, suffocated in gas chambers, or shot to death, and burned in crematorium ovens. For those prisoners who had not survived, victory over Nazi Germany came too late.

Most concentration camps had already been liberated before the end of the war. In January 1945 the Soviet Army liberated Auschwitz. The camps in Germany and Austria were liberated by the Allies in April-May 1945. But at that very time hundreds of thousands of prisoners were being driven along the roads deep into Germany and Austria, without any water or food. Tens of thousands of Jews perished on the way. The weak ones were shot; many others died of cold, hunger, and disease. The sight of the liberated concentration camps made a searing impression on Allied soldiers and officers. There were mountains of bodies the Nazis had had no time to burn. Terribly distorted corpses were scattered all over the camp. Living skeletons gazed at the liberators. In those camps people were killed because they were human beings, because they were innocent.

Life in those camps was much more difficult for us Jews than for other prisoners, as we were tortured both as an inferior race destined for destruction and as criminals. Our sole crime consisted of being born by Jewish mothers.

The liberation of mass murder camps by the Allied troops was of great human and historical importance, though it is still being argued about today. Even after the passage of 55 years since that terrible time, nobody and nothing is forgotten.

The Author

Solomon (Sjoma) Feigerson was born on 16 November 1930 in Liepāja, Latvia. After liberation on 3 May 1945, he returned to Latvia, settling in Rīga where he resumed his education at an evening school. He married Ethel in 1957. Their son Yakov was born in 1960. In 1963 he entered the Faculty of Mechanics, graduating in 1969 as a mechanical engineer. For 15 years he had been working at the Rīga plant "Impuls".

In 1966 Feigerson and his family began to prepare for Aliyah to Israel. After many refusals of an exit permit, they finally arrived in Israel on 1 June 1971. For the next 26 years he worked as an engineer at the plant "Telrad". At present he is retired and lives in Rishon Le Zion, Israel.

Epilogue by the Editor

Some of the murderers got their deserved punishment. Walter Stahlecker, who commanded Einsatzgruppe A that killed 35,000 Jews in Latvia, was fatally wounded by a partisan's bullet near Leningrad in 1942. Friedrich Jeckeln, who killed more than 30,000 in Rumbula, Šķēde, and elsewhere, was hanged in Rīga in 1946. Wolfgang Kügler, head of the Liepāja SD, committed suicide in a West German jail on 2 12 1959. Several other members of the Liepāja SD were tried in Hannover in 1969/71, but got off lightly. Strott—by then a retired hotel director—got only a 7-year prison term, and Grauel, Reiche, Kuketta, Fahrbach, and Rosenstock, 1 1/2 to 6 years. Baumgartner, who was tried in East Berlin, was sentenced to death. I do not know which of the murderers of Kaiserwald and Stutthof were brought to justice, and what the outcome was.

The arch-murderer Viktors Arājs was inexplicably released from British detention in 1948 and lived peacefully in Frankfurt under his wife's maiden name for 27 years. He was apprehended in 1975 and sentenced to life imprisonment (after 199 sessions of the court[7]), but died in 1986. I worked in the War Crimes section of the Federation of Liberated Latvian Jews in Munich in 1948, and helped my counterpart in London, H. Michelson, gather evidence against Arājs and other war criminals. Regrettably, this effort was sabotaged by a Jewish organization that voted to end the London operation, fearing—without any reason whatsoever—that the British government might ban food parcels to survivors if they didn't stop the hunt for war criminals.

[7] Andrew Ezergailis, "The Holocaust in Latvia 1941–1944". Rīga:The Historical Institute of Latvia, 1996.

The Soviets tried about 300 members of the Arājs Commando, most of whom got 10–25 years in the Gulag or the death penalty.[8] They also tried a number of Schutzmänner, but given the arbitrariness of Soviet justice, and the attitude that killing Jews is a less serious crime than killing others, some sentences may have been too lenient and others too harsh.

Many murderers got to the West, and most of them escaped punishment. A significant number went insane[7], which is not a bad substitute for the gallows. Efforts should continue to track down and prosecute murderers. But prospects of conviction get smaller every year, as it becomes harder to prove—to the high standards of Western courts—that a given SS man or Schutzmann pulled the trigger 60 years ago. Whether we like it or not, most of the remaining ones will die peacefully in their beds. While not giving up the hunt for murderers, we should look to the future and try to ensure that the murderers' spirit does not live on among the young people of Latvia and other countries. Holocaust education is being introduced into Latvian schools, and we must hope that just as in Germany, the young generation will condemn the sins of the evildoers of the wartime generation, and fight the racists and hatemongers of their own generation. We can help this process by making a clear distinction between guilty and innocent Latvians and Germans.

INTRODUCTION TO THE LIST

We again emphasize that this list contains only a small fraction of the information in our database. Anyone interested in further details should visit the Website <http//:www.ej-anders.com>. There we give family relationships, occupation, aliases, etc., as well as the sources of each fact—particularly death. For technical reasons, we could not include references in this list, but the database shows from which of 135 sources each detail comes. Some of the website text is in the original Latvian, but will be gradually translated.

Surnames. Nearly 90% of our data were originally in Latvian, and the rest in German, Russian, Hebrew, or English. Each language transliterates Jewish names differently. Moreover, names are often misspelled in wartime lists, having been recorded by people unfamiliar with Jewish names. We have therefore tried to correct and standardize name spellings, mainly following the conventions of the 1992 list of Libauers[1] (English-German hybrid), the Liepāja Jewish Cemetery Book[2] (German), or 1925–27 business directories (German). Even these spellings, evidently approved by the families, often are quite variable. Thus there are ambiguities, and a given surname may show up in different places: Gurvich-Hurwitz, Charny-Tscharny, Cnaimer-Znaimer, Chaimowitz-Haimovich, Stern-Shtern, Selkin-Zelkin, Levinson-Levenson, Wulfson-Volfson. When looking for a given family, please check for all conceivable variant spellings.

First Names. There was less need to impose uniformity, but we changed obviously misspelled names to those used in the Cemetery Book or in a dictionary of Hebrew names[3]. Preferentially, we used the official, mainly Hebrew, names from the 1941 census and from house books rather than the informal names that often appear in Yad Vashem and other records. Such aliases are listed on the website under AKA/Alias. In Soviet records most victims are identified only by surname, and we have therefore used "?" followed by "child", "woman", or "man" for the missing first names.

Birth Dates. Names from the 1941 census almost always include birth dates and places, as well as addresses. Lists from Yad Vashem[4] and the Soviet Extraordinary Commission[5] rarely do, and even those often are grossly inaccurate, by up to 20 years. Where no birth dates were known, we have estimated them from those of spouses, parents, children, or siblings, as even a rough estimate may help identify the person. For people born before 1919, birth dates from different sources sometimes differ by 10–14 days, the earlier ones evidently being on the Julian calendar. Stutthof prisoners often made themselves younger (by up to 15 years) or older, to avoid selection. We generally ignored these dates, but if survivors asked us to keep the younger dates, we complied, realizing that such rejuvenation is a modest way to erase from one's life 4 years in hell.

Birth and Death Places. For places in Latvia we give only the town or pagasts. For those in other countries we use mainly present-day place names in the local language, unless pre-war or English names seem more appropriate. Except for well-known major cities and concentration camps, we also include international abbreviations for the country, generally based on 1937 borders. For Soviet camps (Vjatlag, Jukhnovsklag) we use the abbreviations V/ or J/ before the place name.

Death Dates. In the census, killing (and its date) usually had to be inferred from hints such as "arrested", "did not return from work", "disappeared", "cancelled", etc. We have assigned a date of "7 41" to those victims—mainly men—who were killed between 29 June and the late-August census. The great majority of these killings actually occurred in July, especially 22–24 July. "1941" means 'June-December 1941', but mainly the 15–17 December Aktion. Post-war lists sometimes give exact dates, but usually no dates at all, or grossly inaccurate ones. We gave our best estimates in such cases, based on the known killing pattern in Liepāja. "ca 1941" means 'most probably 1941' (as some 85% of the Liepāja Jews were killed that year) but possibly later. "ca 1943" means killed in Riga or Auschwitz in 1943/44 after liquidation of the Liepāja ghetto.

Address 1941. By late August 1941, many Jews had been evicted from their homes, and had to double or triple up with relatives or friends. We have therefore sorted the list first by surnames and then by 1941 addresses, so that relatives with the same surname appear together.

Previous Address. This was the last address before the August 1941 address. As many Jews had been evicted several times in the first 2 months, it is not necessarily their peacetime address. Indeed, the moves had begun in 1940 under Soviet rule, when living space became rationed.

Street Names. Many were changed in 1939–41 for political reasons, and we have therefore restored the pre-war names in most cases. A list of Latvian and German street names is available on the Internet at http://members.aol.com/liepajalat.

FATE AND REMARKS

Away. Not at home at the time of the August census. This may mean: fled to USSR, out of town, hidden, or killed.

Converted. Converted to Christianity at start of German occupation.

Deported. Deported to USSR on 14 June 1941.

Died Naturally. Died of natural causes. However, we followed the practice of Yad Vashem by classifying such people as "killed" when it seemed that death would not have occurred under peacetime conditions.

Dupl[icate]? People from the Yad Vashem and Extraordinary Commission lists for whom information is incomplete, leaving open the possibility that some are duplicates of other people in the database.

False Papers. Lived under false identity.

Fled. Fled to USSR after start of war.

Fled? Probably fled to USSR.

Ghetto. Was in Liepāja ghetto 1942/43. No list of ghetto residents has been found, but we have reconstructed a partial list from various sources. In this way we have recovered the names of 834 (including 19 possible duplicates) of the initial 832 ghetto residents.

Half-Jew. Classified as half-Jew and therefore exempt from many anti-Jewish measures.

Hidden. Hidden by Latvians.

ITS. Name sent to International Tracing Service, which then searched their card file of 14 million names. For Latvian Jews, these records begin only with their 1944 arrival in Stutthof, and we therefore submitted the names of only those 547 people for whom we had indications at the time that they had survived the killings of 1941.

Husb[and]? Used for women under ~55 who had children but no husband at the time of the census. Although a few may have been widows, the others probably had a husband who was killed during July and then was not listed in the August census. In a number of cases we later found the husband's name in other sources.

Killed. This term is used when there is strong evidence that the person was killed. But this may be wrong in perhaps 1% of the cases, as some people turned out to be alive who had been listed as arrested or killed. Following the practice of Yad Vashem, we make no distinction between death by bullets and death by famine, disease, suicide, inhumane treatment, etc. The criterion is: was the death caused directly or indirectly by Hitler's war?

Killed? Probably killed. This term is used when the evidence is less strong.

Military. Fought in Red Army or in Workers' Militia.

Parents? Used for children when no parent was listed in the same apartment.

Non-Jew. Gentile spouse of a Jew.

Stutthof. Was in Stutthof camp.

Survived. Survivors identified with a high degree of certainty.

Survived? Used when a person of similar name is present in the lists of Libauers, but cannot be conclusively matched with a person in the database.

Blank [= not "Killed", not "Survived"]. For many people, there is no evidence that they were killed and no evidence that they survived. Given that only about 3% of the Liepāja Jews caught by the German invasion survived, and that we know most of them, very few of these people can have survived. Most of them probably died in the massacres of 1941. However, lacking further information, we have left the "Fate" column blank.

ПРЕДИСЛОВИЕ К СПИСКУ

Мы опять подчеркиваем, что этот список является маленькой частью информации нашей базы данных. Каждый, кто заинтересован узнать больше, может посетить вэбсайт <http//:www.ej-anders.com>. Там даётся информация о родстве, профессии, знакомых и.т.д., а также источники информации, особенно о смерти. Из-за технических причин мы не смогли включить в этот список все ссылки, но в базе данных показанно, из какого из 135 источников взята каждая деталь. Часть текста на латышском языке, но постепенно всё будет переведено.

Фамилии*. Сначала около 90% информации в нашей базе данных было на латышском языке, остальное на немецком, русском, иврите и английском языках. На каждом языке еврейские имена пишутся по-разному. Кроме того в списках военного времени фамилии были написаны неправильно, так как записи были сделаны людьми, незнакомыми с их написанием. Поэтому мы старались исправить и стандартизировать написание фамилий в основном следуя система списка Либавцов[1] 1992 г. (английско-немецкий гибрид), используя книгу еврейского кладбища города Лиепая[2] (по-немецки) или списки предприятий 1925–27 гг (по-немецки). Даже это написание, очевидно согласованное с семьями, часто отличается, поэтому часто существуют варианты, одна фамилия может появиться в разных местах, например: Gurvich-Hurwitz (Гурвич-Гурвиц), Charny-Tscharny (Чарны), Cnaimer-Znaimer (Цнаймер-Знаймер), Chaimovitz-Haimovich (Хаймовиц-Гаймовиц), Stern-Shtern (Стерн-Штерн), Selkin-Zelkin (Селкин-Зелкин), Levinson-Levenson (Левинсон-Левенсон), Wulfson-Volfson (Вульфсон-Волфсон). При поиске любой фамилии необходимо проверить все возможные варианты написания.

Имена. Здесь было меньше необходимости принимать какой-либо стандарт, но конечно неправильно написанные имена были исправлены на те, которые были использованы в книге кладбища или в словаре еврейских имён[3]. Мы предпочли использовать официальные, в основном на иврите, имена из переписи 1941 года, имена из домовых книг вместо неофициальных, которые даны в записях Яд Вашема и других. Эти неофициальные имена даны в базе данных на вэбсайте в графе AKA/Alias. В советских записях для большинства жертв дана только фамилия, поэтому мы употребляли вместо имён «?» с пометкой «Child» (ребёнок), «Woman» (женщина) или «Man» (мужчина).

Даты рождения. В переписи 1941 года почти всегда включена информация о месте и годе рождения, а также адрес. В списках Яд Вашема[4] и Чрезвычайной Комиссии[5] такой информации почти нет или она совершенно неправильная. В том случае, когда год рождения был неизвестен, мы устанавливали возраст по данным супруга, родителей, детей, сестёр и братьев, так как даже примерный возраст может помочь опознать личность. В разных источниках возраст тех, кто родился до 1919 года, отличается на 10–14 дней (более ранние даты очевидно даны по Юлианскому календарю). Заключённые Штутгофа часто изменяли свой возраст, делая себя моложе на 15 лет, чтобы избежать «селекции». Обычно мы игнорировали эти даты, но если выжившие просили нас оставить их, мы соглашались с ними, понимая что такое омоложение—способ стереть из своей жизни четыре года, проведённых в аду.

Места рождения и смерти. Для населённых пунктов, находящихся в Латвии, мы используем только название города или округа, а для других стран—главным образом современные названия населенных пунктов на местных языках, если довоенные или английские названия кажутся более подходящими. За изключением известных городов и концентрационных лагерей мы также включили международные сокращения названий стран, основываясь в основном на границах 1937 года. Для советских лагерей (Vjatlag) мы испльзуем сокращение V/.

Даты смерти. Факт и дату гибели в переписи обычно надо было выводить из намёков, таких как: “арестован”, “не вернулся с работы”, “исчез”, “аннулирован” и т.п. Мы определили дату “7 41” для тех жертв, главным образом мужчин, которые были убиты между 29 июня и концом августа, когда проходила перепись населения. Подавляющее большинство этих убийств действительно произошло в июле, особенно 22–24 июля. “1941” означает “июнь-декабрь 1941 года”, но главным образом Акцию 15–17 декабря. В послевоенных списках иногда указаны точные даты (хотя обычно там вовсе нет дат) или очень неточные. В таких случаях мы приводили свои оценки, которые основывались на известном образце убийств в Лиепае. “Приблизительно 1941” (ca 41) означает

"вероятней всего 1941" (так как около 85% евреев Лиепаи были убиты в этом году), но возможно и позже. "Примерно 1943" (са 43) означает смерть в Риге или лагере Аушвиц в 1943–1944 годах после ликвидации Лиепайскогогетто.

Адрес в 1941 году. К концу августа 1941-го года многих евреев выселили из их домов, и им пришлось переселиться в квартиры своих родственников или друзей. Поэтому мы отсортировали список по фамилиям и по адресу 1941 года, чтобы родственники с одинаковой фамилией появились в списке вместе.

Предыдущий адрес. Это был последний адрес до августа 1941 года. Так как многих евреев выселяли несколько раз в первые 2 месяца, то это не обязательно их адрес в мирное время. Действительно переезды начались в 1940 году при Советской власти, когда жилищная площадь была "нормирована".

Названия улиц. Многие улицы были переименованы в 1939–1941-ом годах по политическим причинам, и поэтому в большинстве случаев мы восстановили довоенные названия. Список названий улиц можно найти в Интернете по адресу: http://members.aol.com/liepajalat.

СУДЬБА И ЗАМЕТКИ

Away (Отсутствует). Отсутствует дома во время переписи в августе. Это может означать: бежал в СССР, находится за городом, спрятан или убит.

Converted (Обращён). Обращён в христианство в начале немецкой оккупации.

Deported (Депортирован). Депортирован в СССР 14 июня 1941 года.

Died naturally (Умер естественной смертью). Умер по естественным причинам. Несмотря на это, мы следовали практике Яд Вашем и классифицировали таких людей, как "убитых", если нам казалось, что смерть не наступила бы в мирных условиях.

Dupl[icate]? (Дубликат?). Люди из списков Яд Вашем и ЧК, о которых дана неполная информация, что оставляет открытой возможность того, что записи о них являются дубликатами записей о других людях, находящихся в базе данных.

False papers (Фальшивые документы). Жил по фальшивым документам, скрывал свою национальность.

Fled (Бежал). Бежал в СССР после начала войны.

Fled? (Бежал?). Возможно бежал в СССР.

Ghetto (Гетто). Был в Лиепайском гетто в 1942–1943 годах. Список населения гетто не был обнаружен, но мы восстановили частичный список по информации из разных источников. Таким образом мы получили 834 имён (включая 19 возможных дубликата) из 832 человек, находившихся в гетто.

Half-Jew (Полуеврей). Классифицирован как полуеврей и поэтому освобождён от многих антиеврейских мероприятий.

Hidden (Спрятан). Спрятан латышами.

ITS (ИТС). Запрос сделан в International Tracing Service по розыску документов указанных имён в их 14-миллионной базе данных. Для латышских евреев эти записи начались только в 1944 г. с их прибыванием в Штутггоф и поэтому мы подали имена только тех людей о которых мы имели показания что они выжили уничтожение 1941 г.

Husb[and] (Муж?). Используется для женщин до 55 лет, у которых есть дети, но нет мужа во время переписи. Хотя некоторые могли быть вдовами, у остальных возможно был муж, которого убили в июле и поэтому он не появился в переписи. В некоторых случаях мы позже нашли имя мужа в других источниках.

Killed (Убит). Этот термин использован, когда смерть человека очевидна. Но в 1% случаев это неверно, так как некоторые люди оказались живыми, хотя были записаны как арестованные или убитые. Следуя практике Яд Вашем мы не делаем различие между смерти от пули, голода, болезни, нечеловеческого обращения, и.т.д.

Killed? (Убит?). Возможно убит. Этот термин используется, когда вероятность смерти меньше.

Military (Военный). Воевал в Красной Армии или Рабочей Гвардии.

Parents? (Родители?) Используется для детей, когда в той же квартире не прописаны родители.

Non-Jew (Нееврей). Нееврейский супруг еврея.

Stutthof (Штуттгоф). Находился/находилась в лагере Штуттгоф.

Survived (Выжил). Выжившие опознаны с большой степенью определённости.

Survived? (Выжил?). Используется, когда человек с похожим именем есть в списках Либауэров, но трудно окончательно соединить его с человеком из базы данных.

Пустой [= не "Убит", не "Выжил."]. Для многих людей нет доказательств, что они были убиты или выжили. Учитывая, что только около 3% из евреев Лиепаи, застигнутых врасплох немецкой оккупацией, выжило, и что мы знаем большинство из них, очень немногие люди могли выжить. Большинство из них возможно погибло во время расстрелов 1941 года. Несмотря на это, мы оставили колонку "Судьба" пустой, так как у нас не хватает дальнейшейинформации.
