PREFACE

The literature of Jewish communal activities has not kept pace with the actual progress and the development of Jewish organizations. This may explain why Greater New York with its thousands of societies, institutions, and agencies has, for many years, made no attempt to issue a periodical registry or survey of its multitude of organized activities.

New York, which was the pioneer and made the first experiment in an all-over communal organization with the Jewish Community (Kehillah) of New York City, which was organized in 1909, now lags behind a number of other cities where Jewish Community Councils have taken definite and substantial form and where the differences between powerful Federations and Welfare Funds and dissenting groups of delegates from organizations are gradually being adjusted.

To be sure, the Brooklyn Jewish Community Council is laboriously persevering to gain a foothold in its section of the City, while the Jewish Community of the Bronx functions as a branch of the American Jewish Congress, occupying a position that was for a time held (for Manhattan and other sections of the City) by the Jewish Council of Greater New York which, from 1924 to 1938, struggled to revive the Kehillah idea in New York. The Council only succeeded in preserving and bequeathing to the Community one of its projects, the Jewish Information Bureau, just as the original Kehillah, at its dissolution, felt to the Community the legacy of the Bureau of Jewish Education, the forerunner of all subsequent activities in the field. In the main, however, the vast conglomeration of New York Jewry remains without elected and authorized representation and leadership, though the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies has to its credit the creation of a wider sense of a communal responsibility for charitable and philanthropic work and has shown a way of jointly providing the funds for and co-ordinating the tasks of a huge chain of relief and welfare institutions.

The conflict between the money-raising Federations and Welfare Funds and the more deliberative assemblies of Community Councils outside of New York still goes on but the latter are step by step acquiring more influence in the disposition of funds and in decisions relating to communal management, in some instances the Community Council itself becoming the Federation of Welfare Fund, marking the realization of actual unity and communal self-rule. That, however, reflects an aspect of the national problem of Jewish organizations outside of our present purview, involving as it does, the possibility of a merger of all Jewish Community Councils into a central, all-inclusive body of American Jewry approximating to an enlarged scope the American Jewish Conference.

Viewing the problem from a local and regional angle, it may be observed that New York has fallen further behind even in the matter of recording and surveying all of its many religious, communal, cultural, welfare, Zionist and other enterprises in one compact volume.

The only guide books previously published by the Jewish Community (Kehillah) of New York City took the form of "The Jewish Communal Directory of Greater New York," edited by B. G. Richards, published in 1912, and "The Jewish Communal Register," edited by the late Dr. Samson Benderly, published in 1918. There has not been a similar Directory published in more than a generation. Yet this has been a period of tremendous growth of the Jewish Community, of epoch-making changes and vicissitudes occasioned by the upheavals and tragic events of two World Wars.

The backwardness in communal organization of Greater New York may be partly explained by the huge size and unwieldy character of the Jewish population of approximately 2,500,000 souls residing in the five Boroughs of the City and by the presence in the Metropolis of the headquarters of numerous central and national organizations and welfare, relief, and civic-protective agencies which, in the first place, absorb the manpower and energy of most of our communal workers and, in the second place, usurp the functions of organizations which may deal with local communal purposes and problems.

However these circumstances may be—and a discussion of them would take us far afield—the need for an index to our vast communal enterprises and efforts has long been seriously felt and on many occasions publicly emphasized. Demands for information and educational needs do not receive the same ready response as that which is given to more direct charitable and welfare needs, though the raising of funds and the obtaining of support for the needy and distressed at home or abroad has direct relation to the creation of a better informed and more enlightened Jewish community.

The Officers and the Directors of the Jewish Information Bureau, who are constantly facing a veritable barrage of inquiries and requests for information on a thousand and one subjects have naturally been strongly impressed by the urgent need for a book giving such information and have been thinking about it for some years. It was not, however, until the beginning of this year that a number of friends among our Directors and Members, through their generous assistance, made it possible to take the initial steps to prepare the Directory.

Unlike the previous Directories, no attempt has been made to list all the local and smaller Jewish organizations of New York, as was done in the 1912 book, nor to publish articles giving the history of various central organizations, as was done in the 1918 volume. The main purpose which guided the preparation of this Directory was the registration of agencies, institutions and national and central organizations from the point of view of immediate service and of guiding the large numbers of interested persons to the activities and centers of Jewish public endeavors which they may wish to contact. The smaller local organizations or branches of Landsmanschaften, which in most instances are affiliated with the central organizations or Federations, can be located through these central headquarters which we have listed, the names of Landsmanschaften being given according to the countries of origin, viz: the Federation of Polish Jews, the Federation of Lithuanian Jews, etc.

In the absence of a complete roster of all the synagogues of Greater New York, which would include many small congregations of a temporary and unstable character, we have, owing to the limitation of our facilities, resorted to the means of listing only those houses of worship that are affiliated with the three leading Federations of Congregations—the Union of Orthodox Congregations, the United Synagogues of America and the Federation of Reform Congregations of Greater New York. Other synagogues of the Greater City function as divisions of Jewish Centers and other educational institutions which are registered and included as such.

All institutions listed here are, of course, of a public character, i.e., they are supported by and are functioning for the benefit of the members of the Jewish Community. The only exceptions are those relating to newspapers, magazines and other periodicals which, though private enterprises, we deemed as belonging to the class of public services.

The Classified List is an index or guide to all organizations, institutions and other agencies, and is based upon their functions, activities and purposes. One can best find the public activities he is seeking by following in the Classified List the various designations of the institutions such as Aged, Agriculture, Appeals and Funds, Arts and Science, Athletics, Blind (care of), Burial Societies (free), Camps, Civic Protection, etc., the organizations referred to being designated by numbers under which they are registered in the Alphabetic List.

In compiling this material the editors have noticed, and have been impressed by, several characteristic tendencies in the development of the New York Jewish Community. Among the 1,100 odd listed functions, including duplications, similar activities, etc., it has been noted that approximately 28% of them refer to the needs of the destitute and the under-privileged; 19% of them (not including synagogues named on pp. 55-62, which are not specifically enumerated in the Classified List) respond to the religious interests of the Community; 11% function in behalf of Zionism and the rebuilding of Palestine. Thus it appears that the combined religious and Zionist tendencies of New York Jewry exceed—by 2%—those given to eleemosynary and philanthropic efforts. It should also be noted with great interest that Yeshivahs, which have increased tremendously in the past few years, form about 5% of the total entered in the Classified List while there is only one entry for anti-Zionism, or less than one-tenth of 1% of the total listing. These figures lead to very interesting and significant conclusions. We believe they point to, and definitely identify, the evident tendencies and concerns the Jews of Greater New York and, most likely, of the United States.

As indicated before, the Directory aims to serve a utilitarian purpose which has been borne upon us by the many thousands of inquirers who have been constantly seeking the assistance of various institutions and agencies. Most of these inquirers do not appear to know either the names, locations or even the exact purposes and functions of the institutions sought. Contrary to the complacent attitude of some leaders and workers for various large institutions and organizations of Greater New York, the masses of our people in New York—and this is presumably true of other large cities—are unfortunately woefully ignorant of the thousands of institutions and even of such renowned agencies as the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies, the Joint Distribution Committee or the HIAS, which have been functioning for so many years and which have been so widely publicized. The inquirers that write to our Bureau from New York and from other cities or telephone for information do not always seek assistance or relief of some kind. Some want to become members, others wish to make donations to different institutions, but as a rule they appear to know very little about the agencies which they are seeking to contact.

Hence, it was our chief desire to issue a reference book of immediate and practical value, not so much for the initiated and active members or supporters of our institutions or organizations, but for those more numerous elements outside who today may need guidance and assistance and tomorrow may be among the contributors to and workers for the many different institutions.

Obviously, the first attempt to publish this Directory was beset with many difficulties and the editors do not lay any claim to completeness even from the point of view of the limited scope which they have set for themselves. In the nature of things, certain omissions would occur and here and there some errors will have crept into our register. For these shortcomings we ask the indulgence of the readers and users of the book. We humbly request that they assist us in our effort by forwarding to us any missing information that may be in their possession as well as their suggestions for improvements of contents, methods and procedure for the benefit of the future editions of the book. It is our intention to publish the book periodically, say, every other year, to increase our list and to elaborate more fully upon the information of each organization. The suggestions and assistance of the reader would prove, we are confident, most invaluable in accomplishing this purpose.

An English Page on Sunday

Every day of the week The Jewish Day publishes an English column devoted to Jewish news and Jewish issues of our time.

A full English page appears on Sunday.

A page which includes a review of the Jewish news of the week, reviews of English translations of important Hebrew and Yiddish books, and features articles which deal with important Jewish problems.

Both of these features are of paramount interest to American Jews who think about Jewish issues and problems.

THE JEWISH INFORMATION BUREAU

103 PARK AVENUE

New York 17, N. Y.

MUrray Hill 3-6079

A non-profit agency rendering a free service to the public, the Jewish Information Bureau now enters the fourteenth year of its useful and helpful activity.

Serving as a clearing house of Jewish information, the Jewish Information Bureau answers innumerable questions relating to Jewish organizations, institutions, communal, religious, welfare, relief and all other types of Jewish activities. In response to requests which have come from many cities of the country and from Jewish and non-Jewish circles, it has supplied data in the form of available pamphlets, reports, documents, clippings and various reprints on a great variety of subjects covering every phase of Jewish life and thought, public activities and cultural endeavors.

The Jewish Reference Library and Archive, gradually built up by the Bureau, now presents a most valuable collection of historic and current material which is bound to be highly prized by all students and workers in the fields of Jewish communal service and education.

The Bureau appeals for further support from individuals and organizations on the basis of over thirteen years of excellent services rendered on a most economic and efficient basis.

An English Column Every Day

An English Page on Sunday

Every day of the week The Jewish Day publishes an English column devoted to Jewish news and Jewish issues of our time.

A full English page appears on Sunday.

A page which includes a review of the Jewish news of the week, reviews of English translations of important Hebrew and Yiddish books, and features articles which deal with important Jewish problems.

Both of these features are of paramount interest to American Jews who think about Jewish issues and problems.
