FOREWORD

When Aubrey Newman informed me that he might have original source material detailing our forbears' departure from their mostly Litvak origins in Eastern Europe to Southern Africa via a short sojourn in a London Temporary Shelter, I was amazed that such information was available.

I tested Aubrey Newman and his information by giving him the names of a family whose journey had been well-documented and whose surname was unusual, Kushlick. He immediately responded with the exact ship, time period and individual names of the entire family who made this epic journey.

We at the Isaac and Jessie Kaplan Centre for Jewish Studies and Research at the University of Cape Town then decided to fund the conversion of the raw material into a database for future research and information of the South African Jewish Community. The success of this project was so great that we extended it to the creation of a Centre for Jewish Migration and Genealogy Studies within the Kaplan Centre. We hope to trace the arrival of every Jewish migrant into South Africa and anticipate completing this task by the end of 2007. The project will then track the marriages, births and deaths of these migrants and, if applicable, their emigration from South Africa.

In a separate project we hope to trace the impact that the South African emigrants have had on their new diaspora and the new diaspora's influence on their habits.

Aubrey Newman's discovery and enthusiasm, together with all his many researchers and assistants in parallel with the energies of Nicholas J. Evans, Dr. J. Graham Smith, Saul Issroff, Milton Shain and Janine Blumberg, will hopefully allow us to trace the origins and movements of all those Jews who migrated to South Africa, mostly between 1880 and 1930.

NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

Marc Blumberg is Project Assistant at the Centre for Jewish Migration and Genealogy Studies within the Isaac and Jessie Kaplan Centre for Jewish Studies and Research at the University of Cape Town. His work involves the collation and processing of electronic images and data-capturing for the project at his base in Cape Town. It was this work which led to the creation of the List of Additional Names of Emigrants, appearing in the Southern Africa Jewish Rootsbank Database, who passed through the Poor Jews' Temporary Shelter, 1905-1914. Other data which he has worked on can be seen at the project website http://chrysalis.its.uct.ac.za/CGI/CGI_ROOTWEB.EXE.

Nicholas J. Evans is Research Associate at the Centre for Jewish Migration and Genealogy Studies within the Isaac and Jessie Kaplan Centre for Jewish Studies and Research at the University of Cape Town. He gained his BA (Hons) in History at the University of Leicester and his Ph.D. at the Maritime Historical Studies Centre, University of Hull, examining the neglected subject of European transmigration through Britain between 1836 and 1914. He is a former Caird Fellow of the National Maritime Museum, London, Kaarle Hjalmar Lehtisen Researcher of the Institute of Migration, Finland, and Research Assistant at the AHRB Centre for Irish & Scottish Studies at the University of Aberdeen where he developed the Scottish Emigration Database (www.abdn.ac.uk/emigration) with Marjory Harper. He is currently Lecturer in Slavery Studies, Wilberforce Institute for the study of Slavery and Emancipation, University of Hull.

Saul W. Issroff is Project Director at the Centre for Jewish Migration and Genealogy Studies within the Isaac and Jessie Kaplan Centre for Jewish Studies and Research at the University of Cape Town. He was a founder member and an Honorary Vice-President of the Jewish Genealogical Society of Great Britain and co-founder and President, Southern African Special Interest Group (Genealogy). His publications include The Holocaust in Lithuania, 1941-1945: A Book of Remembrance (Gefen: Jerusalem. 2002) (co-authored with Rose Lerer Cohen), 'Jewish Roots' for www.movinghere.org.uk and 'Southern Africa' in the Avotaynu Guide to Jewish Genealogy (Teaneck, NJ, 2003).

Aubrey Newman is Professor Emeritus of History at the University of Leicester and Honorary Associate Director of the Stanley Burton Centre for Holocaust Studies there. He was originally responsible for the project for the computerisation of the Registers of the Poor Jews' Temporary Shelter covering the period 1896 to 1914. His publications are numerous and include Patterns of Migration (London, 1996) and Migration and Settlement (London, 1970). He is a former President of the Jewish Historical Society of England.

Graham Smith is currently a University Fellow at the University of Leicester. His initial career was in the history of science and technology, with a particular interest in early chemistry and chemical industry on which he wrote The Origins and Early Development of the Heavy Chemical Industry in France (Oxford, 1979). From the late 1980s the main focus of his interest shifted to the use of computing methods in history. At the University of Leicester he developed a pioneering Computing for Historians programme, rooted in the construction of a range of historical databases, among them the Poor Jews Temporary Shelter database of which he has been technical director since 1988.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The authors express their thanks to a number of bodies and persons who have made this work possible. First is Dr Riva Krut, whose thesis on the growth of South African Jewry before the First World War was the first to show some of the possibilities which these records possessed for further analysis. The Committee of the Jews' Temporary Shelter (previously known as the Poor Jews' Temporary Shelter and customarily abbreviated as PJTS) and especially its successive secretaries have facilitated the use of these registers and of several fragments of minute books and correspondence. Colleagues in the School of Historical Studies in the University of Leicester helped in the creation of computer programmes. In the initial stages of computerisation we had the services of Cenka Inan who came to us on placement and enabled us by a process of trial and error to develop the procedures which were thereafter employed. But above all some three hundred undergraduates at Leicester University with greater or lesser enthusiasm took on the task of transcribing the records and putting them onto a computing database. Their names are recorded in Appendix II. One of them, Caroline Barker, completed an M.Phil thesis on the Migration to South Africa.

To Professor Milton Shain, Janine Blumberg, Marc Blumberg, Debbie Beavis, Professor Tony Kushner and those involved with the preparation of this work we pay our thanks for their continued support and advice. In particular we want to thank Sally Roter for her careful editing. The research for and publication of this book has been funded by the Centre for Jewish Migration and Genealogy Studies within the Isaac and Jessie Kaplan Centre for Jewish Studies and Research at the University of Cape Town. Mendel Kaplan's ongoing support has made this project a reality.

INTRODUCTION

With the opening of the Suez Canal in 1869, and the increased use of steam propulsion on Britain's long-haul merchant fleet, important trading routes to India, the Far East, and the southern hemisphere provided shipping companies in late-Victorian Britain with unique opportunities for those involved in shipping freight, mail and people from Europe to the far-flung corners of the globe. The trade was dominated by Britain and her merchant marine: the need to link Britain and her empire. Yet whilst companies such as Peninsular & Oriental and the Wilson Line took significant advantage of the improved links that the Canal presented, other shipowners developed opportunities that scheduled shipping provided by opening up new routes to differing outposts of Britain's Empire. One of these routes, that to the Cape, attracted many potential suitors. Yet as Andrew Porter astutely pointed out, 'any study of the Cape, careful or otherwise, could not have failed to reveal very considerable risks'.[1] To succeed required a degree of entrepreneurial genius, commercial acumen and a determination to succeed using a series of formal and informal networks. Men such as Donald Currie, who in 1872 used his Walmer Castle on the London to Cape Town route, typified the experienced shipowner and managers drawn to the trade.

Currie, the owner of Donald Currie & Company (founded in 1862), later becoming manager of the Castle Mail Packet Company which subsumed the latter in 1876, worked alongside the rival Union Company (founded in 1853) in dominating shipping services between Britain and southern Africa. Yet insofar as both companies were concerned their trade to the Cape centred upon the semi-monopolistic position that they had carved out for themselves by the early 1870s combined with the benefits a similar joint monopoly of the Royal Mail contracts gave them. The Union Shipping Company had been awarded the Royal Mail contract in 1857, and in 1876 it was awarded the joint mail contract with the Castle Company – provided that both companies did not merge. Commercial and mail monopolies therefore created the conditions in which regular and direct steam shipping services were provided between London and Southampton and Cape Town. However whilst royal and dominion mail contracts presented an advantage they also represented a challenge. Though the annual subsidy alleviated much of the financial risks associated with providing direct and indirect shipping services to the Cape, the need to despatch a regular service of mail-boats meant that they had somehow to fill the passenger spaces aboard to make the route profitable.

During the 1880s and early 1890s this need had been met by a regular movement of Cornish tin-miners to take up the opportunities of working in the gold mines of the Transvaal. Such services were promoted in newspaper advertisements and specially commissioned booklets heralding the opportunities that the gold fields of Africa presented to the more adventurous skilled worker.[2] As a result of this stream of passengers both companies laid down a large number of new ships for the route. But when the source of third-class passengers died away in the 1890s, largely because of a decline among the Cornish tin-miners wishing to work in South Africa and a consequent return of many of them back to Cornwall, an alternative source of passengers had to be found. It was the vision, above all of Donald Currie, that the Cornish miners could be replaced by poor East European migrants which fostered the growth of European migration to South Africa. While movement to North America was always more significant in terms of the British passenger shipping industry generally, and cargo vessels covered freight movements to all continents, the migrant streams to South Africa played an important part in the growth of the Castle and Union Lines.

This stream of migration out of Eastern Europe, whether or not individuals passed through Great Britain, was overwhelmingly directed towards North America and represented the bulk of the Jewish migrants. Contemporary evidence – such as in the archives of the Jewish Colonisation Association (ICA) in Jerusalem – shows a wide interest in migration in all the Guberniya of the Pale of Settlement, but moreover highlights that in two of these Guberniya, unusually, most individuals were interested in migrating to South Africa.[3] While 'Litvak' Jews are to be found in migrant communities all over the world, South Africa is unique in boasting not merely of its 'Litvak' but more especially of its Kovno ancestry. The reasons for this phenomenon are difficult to define. Yet evidence suggests that during the economic slump evident in North America during the 1890s shipping companies such as the Union and Castle Lines recognised the opportunities of South Africa – which had not experienced an economic downturn – as an alternative destination for the Jews living within the Pale. From the early 1890s a sustained advertising campaign promoting the longer-term advantages of settlement in South Africa generated a wave of 'Litvak' migration to a destination previously hampered by the higher travel costs associated with the lengthy journey to South Africa. In response to the continued demand, both companies reduced the cost of travel to the Cape in 1895, which in turn furthered the flow of southward migration. Early settlement fostered ensuing chain migration as kith and kin sought to reunite in the Cape Province.

Many individuals can be traced as passing through Hamburg direct to Southampton where they transferred to ships going from there to Cape Town.[4] Others stayed for a while at various addresses in the United Kingdom before travelling to South Africa. For those residing in London while they were waiting for the departure of a Union or Castle vessel the need for short-term shelter became very evident. Yet despite the importance of the establishment of the Poor Jews' Temporary Shelter as a symbol of Victorian philanthropy its activities have been largely neglected even within the extensive historiography relating to the movement of Jews to and through London during the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. Except for various statements that it played an important part in the enforced return of many unwelcome would-be migrants to their native town, and that the Shelter was being used by other charities rather than using its own funds for this purpose, discussion of the centrality and function of philanthropic agencies in directing migration remain a significant lacuna within the current literature.[5]

The legacy of such philanthropy, and in particular its archives, provide an important snapshot of the role of Anglo-Jewry in directing migrant streams during the late-Victorian period. It was an era dominated by discourse on the negative impact of sustained alien immigration to London. Whilst work on the Shelter Registers should not dominate studies of the migration patterns of the Jews from Eastern Europe, they do chart three main streams of migration to London. Not all of the transmigrants passed through the Shelter, and many of the migrants are recorded as going to addresses in London or elsewhere in the United Kingdom; a parallel list of tickets bought through the Shelter also shows a number of persons travelling to North American ports. But it would be the sheer scale of continued transmigration to South Africa – via London and in particular the Poor Jews' Temporary Shelter – that remains the overriding feature of this legacy.

The lists of migrants to South Africa contained within this volume are based upon the records of the Poor Jews' Temporary Shelter, now held at the London Metropolitan Archives, and an additional list of the Shelter's inmates held with the archives of the South African Jewish Board of Deputies in Johannesburg. It is a first attempt to put together a record of the tens of thousands of Jews who came to South Africa from Eastern Europe before the First World War.[6] Although the Shelter was set up to meet such migrants and to protect them from the various crooks who might have robbed them of

[6] A project currently in hand is seeking to create a database utilising the manifests of all passenger ships leaving ports in the UK and calling into South African ports between 1890 and 1930. For more details see http://chrysalis.its.uct.ac.za/CGI/CGI_ROOTWEB.EXE whatever money they carried with them, its primary purpose came to be to meet all the ships containing migrants into the Port of London and to provide temporary accommodation for transmigrants while they were waiting to embark to their further destinations – the United States, Canada, South America, and, most importantly, South Africa.[7] In total 36,350 transmigrants were documented as migrating with the assistance of the Shelter between 1885 and 1914.[8] However many others left for South Africa during this period and would not have used its services and thus do not appear in the Shelter's records or this database.

Part of the work associated with the Shelter included the compilation of Registers recording all those passing through its hands. A number of these Registers have survived and form two distinct series of volumes beginning on 29 May 1896. That this system of recording the details of the users of the Shelter was intended as a distinct innovation becomes clear from closer inspection of the first volume. The first entry in this volume is numbered '1'; thereafter the sequence of numbers continues more or less in due order until 1 January 1897 when the numeration recommences with '1'; thereafter the change is made on 1 November in each year, even when this occurs in the middle of a volume. This change of sequence corresponds with the financial year of the Shelter, which began on 1 November and ran through until the following 31 October, and correlates with statistical evidence presented to the Select Committee on the Emigration and Immigration of Foreigners.[9] Not all the volumes of this main series have survived. For the period up to the outbreak of the First World War twelve volumes of Registers exist, the dates of which are given in the appendix. It can be surmised that at some stage there were at least three further volumes covering the missing periods, i.e. 30 October 1903 - 14 August 1904, 23 June 1905 - 29 November 1907, and 27 November 1911 - 31 July 1913. There seems to have been some earlier system of recording arrivals, since reference is made to it in various entries in the Minutes of the General and Executive Committees of the Shelter, but these do not appear to have survived.

The entries in the main registers are usually numbered in sequence, though sometimes the clerk drawing up the register omitted the number for considerable periods of time or even, on occasion, forgot where he had reached in the sequence and repeated several hundreds of numbers. Sometimes wives and children were given separate and distinct numbers and sometimes they were included in one entry for the entire 'family group'. At an early stage the clerk specifically recorded that various entries were made out of their date sequence since he had not been given the details until later — the clear implication being that he had not registered them as they actually entered the Shelter. In some cases a long list of names is entered in alphabetical order, as if taken from a list that had been previously prepared, a sure sign that they had been booked by an agent working for the shipping company and correlated with an organised outward-bound passenger list. Sometimes the clerk even noted that in addition to the names entered there had been fifty extra persons en route to other destinations (usually Africa) whose names he had not recorded since they had been 'met and seen off only'. Apparently what was significant was to have on record the number of those who had been received by an official of the Shelter either at the port or at the Shelter itself and that they had been given some degree of service. As will be made clear, one of the purposes of this main series of registers was to facilitate the systematic rendering of accounts to the shipping companies for the assistance that the Shelter had provided on behalf of the companies.

In addition to this main series of registers there are six additional parallel volumes: the so-called 'Supplementary Volumes' and a single 'Day Book'. The supplementary series of volumes cover only part of the period. In physical format they follow the same pattern as the main series and were clearly produced by the same printers of the main series as part of a standard order. The entries in these volumes were rarely numbered and were usually written in a far more hurried hand, suggesting that they reflected all those the Shelter met at the London dockside, immigrants, transmigrants, and return migrants. They contain large numbers of London addresses and often give additional information about relationships between the person listed and the address to which they were going. In a large number of cases the letters 'NA' (i.e. No Address) are listed next to the names, and sometimes the original address is scored through and the letters NA replace it, a sign of the way in which the Shelter followed through on the particulars given to it by the newly-arrived. In many cases, after the London address, there is an additional annotation indicating that the immigrant is travelling on to America and very often including the name or initials of the agent in London from whom they are to receive their tickets. The names in these volumes usually include the names of those featuring in the 'main' series of registers, especially the names of all those going to South Africa. It is important to note that the main registers include the names of all those going to South Africa, virtually all those for whom the other registers note NA, and those who are noted as being in passage to their 'Native Town' back from America. Unlike the so-called supplementary series and a so-called 'Day Book', the Main Registers also note the length of stay, and, where the 'inmates' were proceeding elsewhere, they usually noted the name of the ship on which they subsequently travelled.

A third type of register, very different in format and appearance from the others, has also appeared from a private source. This is a foolscap volume which was not prepared with printed tables as were the others, but was instead completed by a Shelter official at the dockside as a kind of 'Day Book'. This seems to have been a 'rough' arrival list of names drawn up as passengers landed at the dockside in London or arrived at the London terminus from Grimsby, Hull, Harwich or Southampton. There is no way of telling whether it represented one of a series of notebooks but there is no reason for a solitary volume of this sort to have existed, and it parallels a similar volume for a sister organisation, The Jewish Association for the Protection of Girls and Women. This latter volume covers the period between 1 January 1910 and 29 August 1914, dealing with inward and outward bound passengers at the port of Southampton (between 17 March 1910 and 20 April 1912) and then at Hull (from 10 January 1913 to 30 July 1914).[10] The single foolscap volume also proceeds on a day-by-day basis, noting the ship, dock and time when each person had arrived in London, or whether they had come by train. In the latter case it recorded the station at which they had arrived. Associated with each entry is a note of destination and the port at which the person boarded their ship.

All these volumes thus offer an insight into how aliens were documented upon arrival in Britain before and in some cases after the passage of the 1905 Aliens' Act.[11] Whilst other official sources have been shown to be erroneous in recording many as having immigrated into London, these records show that most were actually transient (or transmigrant) in nature and en route to far away places (South Africa in particular).[12] To gain a greater understanding of the demographic features evident from this source, it was obvious (with the development of computers) that some form of computational process was needed – hence the role of the University of Leicester in creating the lists now detailed in this volume.

The database was originally created in 1987 when computing became an integral part of undergraduate teaching for the History Degree of the University of Leicester and permission was given by the officers of the Poor Jews' Temporary Shelter to use its records for this purpose. Over [11] It replaced an earlier Act which was shown to be negligent as a measure for recording migrant entry as early as 1854. By 1860 it had largely fallen into disuse.

[12] See Cecil Bloom, 'The Politics of Immigration, 1881-1885', Jewish Historical Studies XXXIII (1995), and Nicholas J. Evans, 'Indirect Passage from Europe: Transmigration via the UK, 1836-1914', Journal for Maritime Research (Greenwich, 2000).

59,000 records have now been entered from the Shelter registers, nearly two-thirds of them by the combined efforts since the late 1980s of some 300 undergraduate students.[13] The virtual completion of this initial stage of the work has made it possible to present this interim list of names of Jewish migrants to South Africa during these years. There are still a number of snags and potential causes of error and confusion within the information gleaned from this computational exercise. Inevitably there will be a number of cases where the clerk making the original entry or the students making the first transcription and entering the details into the computer have made mistakes. It is unlikely for instance that there was anybody aged 168 travelling to Cape Town. Given that the clerk originally transcribed into a Latin alphabet the name that he had heard, or thought that he had heard, it would be a matter of luck to be able to pick up the members of a single family travelling some years apart. There remains in consequence a considerable amount of editing and correction to be made in the lists before they can be considered as a fully accurate record. Given also that in many cases numbers had to be created for individual entries in order to have them fully noted on the computer, it will not necessarily be easy to make a direct link between the original Registers and these entries. Nonetheless these draft lists represent a first step in making the results of these labours more generally available.[14] They do not represent the final stage in the work of establishing a complete list of all those who went to South Africa before the outbreak of the First World War stopped the free flow of migration out of the Pale of Settlement. Further work needs to be done in the United Kingdom, in South Africa, and perhaps even in archives elsewhere. There are other sources of names, although not as rich in detail as these have been, which still remain to be tapped.

THE POOR JEWS' TEMPORARY SHELTER AND MIGRATION TO SOUTH AFRICA, 1885-1914

Initial analysis of the Shelter Registers, as shown in Table 1, indicates that the bulk of the emigrants to South Africa passing through the Shelter came from that part of the Russian Empire popularly known as Lite (Lithuania), and in most cases from the Kovno Guberniya (Governmental district).

Conditions there for Jews were not easy, as shown by a description produced in 1902:

> At certain seasons of the year an important wood industry is carried on here. Rafts are floated down the river from up country, and have to be reconstructed and strengthened when they reach the town. This work is carried on entirely by Jewish labour. It is of an arduous kind involving muscular strength and endurance and it involves great exposure. The labour is highly paid and the people engaged upon it for four or five months live for the rest of the year on the wages they receive. At Kovno there is a brewery owned by a Jewish gentlemen in which a number of Jewish as well as Christian hands are employed.
> The Jewish population lives for the most part in the suburbs of Slobodka, which consists entirely of wood cottages standing on canals of mud, miscalled roads. There are said to be 10,000 inhabitants in this quarter, nearly all of them Jews. It reminded me strongly of a poor Scottish village. The people, whose occupation is mostly out door, looked more healthy and robust than those in the ghettos of the towns. The interior arrangements of the houses were similar to those of a Scotch croft. Some of the floors were without boards and plastered with mud.

I do not think the conditions here were worse than might be found in the Highlands of Scotland and certainly not so bad as in the congested districts of Ireland. The Rabbi told me that owing to a crisis in the wood trade which had thrown a number of people out of normal employment, the poverty this year was exceptionally great. It is generally some such incident which leads to increased emigration. The population is so poor and the labour market so overcrowded and sensitive that influences of this kind are felt out of all proportion to their real importance.[16]

There were certainly strong pressures encouraging outward migration from this region. A report prepared in 1906 for the Jewish Colonisation Association shows a very high activity of movement:

The emigration of Jewish habitants constitutes in all the Government of Kovno as well as in the chief place itself a very strongly marked phenomenon. As a result of the proximity of the German frontier a great part of the emigrants take the road to Germany but there are also others who take the road to Libau. ... The number of emigrants embarking at Libau grows every year, and in this respect the current year exceeds all precedents. At least two boats a week depart from Libau each of these boats conveying 300 to 500 migrants at least.[17]

Those now choosing to migrate to South Africa were of general or no occupation. They were often skilled, but sought new opportunities abroad. As tentative analysis of those destined for South Africa via the Poor Jews' Temporary Shelter reveals the majority did not list an occupation; of those who did the general occupation was of traditional skills associated with Jews living in the Pale such as dealer, tailor, boot maker or carpenter. The following tabulation of data from the database highlights the most popular occupations.

Whether they chose to leave the Pale through Libau (modern day Liepāja) or via Germany their journeys were facilitated by a network of agents and sub-agents who were in a position both legally and illegally to facilitate journeys, giving information about trains, desirable routes, and the costs of the various journeys involved.[19] These agents had established their own links with one or other of the shipping companies in the Baltic who had developed what was virtually a system of feeder services to one or other of the great trans-oceanic shipping companies.

Most of those leaving Russia in the late 19th century crossed legally or illegally into Austria-Hungary or Germany, travelled to the nearest railway station, and then journeyed across Europe by train to a North Sea port – Hamburg, Bremen, Rotterdam or Antwerp – many arriving during the early hours of the morning. Having reached the port, the migrants would be housed in port-based lodgings until their ship was ready to sail. For those who had journeyed across the European mainland the final reward was travel in a clean, fast and safe vessel. The ships working the short sea routes between Germany, Holland or Belgium and Britain were relatively comfortable, regardless of passenger class. Most Jewish migrants travelled below deck in the third-class steerage compartments, and although conditions in such 'tween decks were far from elaborate, they did offer comfortable travel for the two-day crossing to Britain.

After the opening of a direct rail service between Romny (in Poltava) and Libau in 1882 the Baltic port quickly expanded. When cholera brought the port of Hamburg to a standstill in 1892 ports such as Libau were 'opened up' as alternative emigrant ports. Those wishing to leave the Pale increasingly sailed from nearby ports. From whence they were bound for Hamburg, Hull or London. Ultimately they sought to reach the British ports of London or Southampton from where they could embark for South Africa. (Copyright of the Manchester Jewish Museum, 1984-260.)

This contrasted with conditions on board ships leaving Baltic ports. The direct railway line between Romny and Libau made emigration easier for Jews throughout the Pale of Settlement, and in particular principal towns and cities such as Kovno, Vilna, Vitebsk, Kiev and Minsk).[20] Moreover, the emigrants did not have to cross the Russian border in order to reach Libau, and unlike the nearby ports of Riga, St. Petersburg, Åbo or Hangö, the port did not freeze during the winter – thus enabling access throughout the year. From 1896 onwards, migration to London from Libau rose from just over 1,000 Russians and Poles a year to over 5,000 a year by 1900. Those leaving were predominantly Jewish. Migrants liked the Russian port of Libau because there were no medical inspections before sailing, and the direct sea journey was cheaper than crossing mainland Europe. Even the poorest Russian Jew could afford these crossings, but they involved a much longer journey along the Kattegat or via the Kiel Canal than those from the North Sea ports. The journey lasted between five and six days before the opening of the Kiel Canal in 1895, which reduced the journey-time by a day, and conditions on board were horrific – the vessels used were often designed for the shipment of cargo, foodstuffs or livestock, and not third-class passengers.

[20] For more information on the development of the port of Libau see Nicholas J. Evans, 'The Port Jews of Libau, 1880-1914' in David Cesarani and Gemma Romain (eds.), Jews and Port Cities, 1590-1990: Commerce, Community and Cosmopolitanism (London, 2006), pp. 197-214.

Many immigrants had little money beyond what they had saved for the journey and the initial payment for lodgings in the East End. The limited means of most migrants were often further depleted by the need to bribe officials policing the Russian border and ports, or the cost of lodgings in European ports of departure. Some of the migrants obtained passports or travel permits to leave the Guberniya in which they lived, but these could be difficult to obtain and the additional cost often prevented many poor Jews from leaving legally, so many travelled without such documentation. Very often, it was the shipping agents who obtained the passports for them. This reduced the cost of the passport, but often resulted in a number of completely unconnected people appearing on one family passport. Each stage in the journey was fraught – corrupt officials, the danger of robbery and deception, and unnecessary delays and expenses.

Departure from the Pale always commenced with a journey by foot or rail. The rail journey was time-consuming as the railway network was poorly developed. Each train carried cargo and passengers. The journey to a Baltic port of departure was an additional financial burden. Even at Baltic ports such as Libau, where police controlled access to vessels for the 24 hours before sailing, it was still possible – through bribes – to gain passage to the west without any documentation. A few hours before departure the emigrants made their way to the Winter Harbour where they boarded the vessels that would take them to Hull or London. These vessels were not designed for large numbers of passengers. They were mostly cattle ships, registered under the Danish flag, and operated by Det Forenede Dampskibs-Selskab (hereafter DFDS) of Copenhagen. Agents in Libau arranged passage on the vessels. These headed a network throughout the Pale of Settlement, selling tickets for the journey to Britain, America, Canada and South Africa. They sold as many tickets as they could for a section of the vessel that they had, in effect, leased from the ship-owner. The more people they could fit into the space available, the more profit they generated. For those travelling on these overcrowded cattle ships, the problems went beyond the lack of space and the fitted berths in which they had to sleep. Although the British Merchant Shipping Act of 1894 had introduced regulations to ensure that cattle and migrants were not carried in the same part of the ship, inevitably the drive for profit and the demand to leave the Pale meant that many migrants travelled in extremely dirty and unhealthy conditions.

Vessels such as the Romeo (built in 1880 for the Wilson Line of Hull) were used during the opening decades of the twentieth century to convey emigrants from Baltic ports such as Libau to the British ports of Hull and London. Carrying both goods and passengers the journey typically lasted between five and six days. The Romeo could accommodate 39 first-class passengers, 22 second-class passengers and a large number of steerage passengers. (Copyright of the Hull Maritime Museum, Hull Museums and Art Gallery.)

When a ship arrived at Gravesend it was met by an officer of HM Customs and a medical inspector from the Port of London Port Sanitary Authority. Once the first- and second-class passengers had disembarked (which they did at Tilbury after the dock was opened in 1886) the medical officer subjected every third-class passenger to a rudimentary medical inspection in the first-class dining or smoking rooms in the case of passenger ships, or on the deck in the case of cattle ships. Those found to be suffering from 'reportable illnesses' (such as cholera, typhus, yellow fever or smallpox) were detained at the floating (later land-based) isolation hospital of the Port Sanitary Authority. Those who appeared free of disease, or who had evaded detection by working their passage as cattle handlers, disembarked at the dock where their ship berthed (usually Millwall), or at one of the Thames landing stages such as St. Katharine's Steam Packet Wharf, the Customs Wharf, Hays Wharf, or Irongate Stairs. There they frequently fell victim to crimps, who preyed on vulnerable immigrants. These crimps were often able to speak in the migrants' native language, and they duped them into paying for subsequent journeys to fictitious places, forced their victims to stay in over-priced lodgings or exchanged their money at extortionate rates. In an attempt to combat the problem, Jewish welfare organisations such as the Poor Jews' Temporary Shelter and the Jewish Association for the Protection of Girls and Women arranged to meet every vessel carrying migrants into London to offer advice, temporary lodgings or tickets to onward destinations.

Before the opening of the Shelter in 1885 migrants arriving at the Port of London were often exposed to 'crimps' who preyed on vulnerable aliens. (Taken from G.R. Sims, 'Sweated London' in G.R. Sims (ed.) Living London: Its work and its Play: Its Humour and its Pathos: Its Sights and its Scenes (London, 1901), from the collections of the Jewish Museum, London.)

The promotion of onward migration had not been the main reason for the foundation of organizations such as the Poor Jews' Temporary Shelter, which indeed concentrated on the protection of the large numbers passing through London either with the intention of continuing their journey elsewhere or staying in the hope that they would find living conditions better than they had faced at home. The 'Great Migration', the mass departure of millions of Jews from Russia, resulted amongst other things in the arrival of tens of thousands of Jewish migrants into Great Britain. It also presented a series of challenges to the existing community, many of whose leaders were not exactly enthusiastic about such arrivals and their impact not only on their own community but also on the wider non-Jewish community. One of the immediate reactions amongst official bodies was to try to persuade them to return to their homes. Messages were sent to the Rabbis of Eastern Europe asking them to put pressure on would-be migrants telling them that there were no jobs and no opportunities for poor Jews who had no skills and no capital. Yet still they came, so something had to be done to lessen the burden of mass immigration and prevent the situation described in 1886:

> [T]he stress of foreign oppression ... led to a constant flooding of the East End of London with our poor foreign co-religionists. These were harboured by their humble brethren in miserable hovels and even crowded for the night onto dingy places of worship belonging to the chevras that abound in the district....[21]

It was left initially to individuals to organise some help on an unofficial basis. One of these attempts was by Simcha Cohen, often known as Simcha Becker on account of the bakery that he ran in Church Lane. He allowed poor immigrants to sleep in the back of his shop and supplied them with bread. Conditions however were far from satisfactory. A writer in the Jewish Chronicle described them accordingly:

> At 19 Church Lane Whitechapel there is a refuge for Jewish people who are out of employment. ... It is obvious that this place of shelter cannot encourage people to be idle, because its abject misery is worse than any workhouse, and it provides less food. There is absolutely no sleeping accommodation except a wooden floor. The only kind of daily food they get is rice and tea and bread, and this is very irregular. Let us get a "responsible committee" or ... let a few gentlemen see if they cannot get a few cheap mattresses for the older men to lie upon at night and some blankets or rugs. The place, such as it is, is maintained by two co-religionists in very humble circumstances.[22]

Hermann Landau, Vice President of the Poor Jews' Temporary Shelter, reported on it later to a Select Committee of the House of Commons:

I visited their place and I found it in a most insanitary condition. In fact it was a permission given by a Jewish baker, to whom the premises belonged, for those outcasts to lie down in a kind of loft; and as for undressing, that never could take place there.[23]

Despite the publicity being negative, knowledge of Simcha Becker's activities grew; he was eventually compelled to close down this establishment as a result of pressure put on him by the local sanitary authorities as well as by some of the leaders of the Anglo-Jewish community itself. The community did not seek to entice migrants but similarly recognised that there was a need to alleviate the sufferings of their co-religionists. Pressure by other leaders of the community, such as Hermann Landau (a Polish-Jewish banker, himself a comparatively recent immigrant), Samuel Montagu and three leading members of the Franklin family, led soon afterwards to the foundation of an institution specifically intended to give some sort of assistance and shelter to poor immigrants, especially those who hoped to be in onward transit. Landau declared firmly the aims of the founders of this new body, The Poor Jews' Temporary Shelter: 'The Shelter was established to supersede and has effectively superseded an objectionable and long-existing refuge and has subsequently led to the closing of private resorts that were beyond question a scandal to the community.'[24]

In one of the Annual Reports he reaffirmed the necessity for the institution:

Had the Shelter not been available for these hapless wanderers to our shores they would inevitably have got into the toils of those merciless sharks who watch for the arrival of such poor foreign immigrants, take them to their dens misnamed lodging houses, retain them until their scanty means are exhausted and then cast them upon the streets friendless and penniless.[25]

His later evidence to the 1903 Royal Commission on Alien Immigration placed greater emphasis on what later became a very important part of the activities of the Shelter:

> I was instrumental in founding the Shelter in the year 1885 with the view primarily of providing a temporary refuge and protection for those immigrants who were proceeding to America, Africa and other countries and were waiting in London pending the departure of their ships. .... Many of these people had previously been obliged to sleep in lofts and other miserable places of temporary rest. They were made the easy victims of crimps and of persons who offered to act the part of the Good Samaritan by assisting them to their destination but were only too eager to take advantage of their ignorance to rob them of all they possessed. In some cases they were made the prey of the sweater and sometimes the women folk were practically sold to brothels.[26]

The Preamble of the original Constitution of the Shelter, drawn up in 1885, further declared:

> The influx of homeless and helpless foreign Jews, driven by force of circumstances to seek a livelihood in England, being sadly on the increase, and unduly pressing on their struggling brethren already here, this Society is formed with a view to prevent new comers from either being driven into the Mission House, or lapsing into pauperism, and becoming a burden on the Community. To this end a Refuge is established whereat, after due investigation, newly arrived immigrants can be lodged and fed (in accordance with the strictest Jewish requirements) in case of utter destitution gratis, else at as low a charge as possible, until it be determined whether they can permanently support themselves by honest labour here, or must, in their own interest as well as that of the community, be repatriated, or directed to other lands.[27]

The Shelter had originally been opened in temporary premises at 12 Garden Street, but within a year arrangements were made for it to move to 84 Leman Street. Within a few years it and its leaders had found a recognised place in the establishment, Jewish and non-Jewish alike. Committees set up by both Houses of Parliament to enquire into the details of foreign immigration called upon Landau to give evidence and it was generally accepted that the Shelter was playing an important part in helping the onward movement of Jewish immigrants.[28] At the same time it was able to draw attention to abuses suffered by Jews either en route to overseas destinations or even on their way back. The existence of such ephemeral organisations was quite common, in Britain and elsewhere.[29] There seems to have been something resembling a 'Shelter' in Liverpool in the early 1880s but any trace of that soon disappeared, while in North America the Hebrew Emigrants Aid Society, founded in 1869, disbanded in 1873, and re-founded in 1881, was no longer in being by 1883 but it was again reconstituted in 1889.[30] Societies founded throughout the west by local Jewish communities to give shelter to needy travellers and the poor, – such as Hachnasath Orechim or Travellers' Aid Societies were often short-lived. As small scale ventures they were constantly dogged by shortfalls in funding. Such fiscal challenges were not restricted to only the smaller organizations.

Despite all the goodwill which had existed at the time of its foundation the London Shelter might well have followed the same path. Like the provincial shelters it was unable to secure an adequate, stable source of funding. Small lists of subscribers were regularly named and thanked at the end of its annual reports, but the majority of the Shelter's financial supporters were on the borderlines of poverty themselves. A few leading figures offered several hundred pounds to help meet specific crises but its balance sheets indicate clearly that it was constantly living on the financial margin, and its Secretary had constantly to issue warnings that cheques which might have been signed during the course of a meeting of the Executive could not be met from the funds at its disposal. Often the minutes even record a loan being made by one or other member of the Executive to allow it to survive. In this aspect it differed greatly from a similar institution in Paris, the Asile, which had a strong and regular list of subscriptions.[31] Other organisations, such as the Unterstutzüngsverein für Obdachlose (Support Association for the Homeless) founded by Daniel Wormser in Hamburg in 1884, were similarly kept on a more secure financial footing by Jewish philanthropists and the more affluent middle classes.[32] A report referring to the Shelter in 1893 makes clear its financial predicament in that year:

> The Shelter, 84 Leman Street, is a charitable institution furnished with 60 beds, its object being, as its name implies, to shelter and supply with food needy Jews who arrive here without addresses. If this were done the institution would be a boon, not only to Jewish immigrants but also to London as the immigrants would be protected from crimps and sweaters to a great extent and much of the misery occasioned by the activity of these persons saved. I regret to say that this is not done. The beds of the Shelter have not been occupied for years the reason being, as the superintendent Mr Smith himself told me, that the immigrants were so dirty that the committee found it better to hand them over to lodging-house keepers who, he remarked were glad to have them.[33]

Instead, the London's Shelter's fortunes appear to have been remedied not through capital or regular funding secured through philanthropic endeavours, but instead by a decision taken by its Committee in 1893 'that steps be taken to obtain agencies to such steam-ship lines as would facilitate the booking of immigrants at the Institution', and it was that arrangement which allowed the Shelter to survive.[34]

The poor condition of the earlier Shelter necessitated the move of the organisation from 84 to 82 Leman Street in 1906 and enabled the Shelter authorities to comply with the conditions of the Common Lodging House Act. A joint application for registered lodging house status was made for both the Shelter and its sister organisation – the Jewish Association for the Protection of Girls and Women – in 1906. While the precise details of how the agreements were reached are not at all clear it was in 1893 that for the first time there appear in the minutes of the Executive Committee and in the annual Accounts references to cheques being received from Messrs Donald Currie and Company.[35] It was not long before these cheques became a regular and important factor in the Shelter's finances. It was also in January 1893 that South Africa is first mentioned in the Minutes, when the Chief Rabbi, Dr. Adler, asked the Shelter to look after the wife of the Shochet of the Durban community who was en route to join her husband, and promising to reimburse the Shelter for all costs incurred for doing so.[36]

The analysis of destinations of those passing through the shelter (as shown in Table 3) contained in the Annual Report for 1892-93 included for the first time those going to South Africa.[37] If there had been any before November 1892 they had been subsumed into the category of 'other' [destinations], but thereafter the figures increased considerably. In November 1892, there were recorded 13 migrants to Africa, and the figure for the year was 453 inmates out of a total of 1,951. But the trickle became a stream, and the stream became a flood, and the year from November 1895 to October 1896 recorded 2,134 out of a total of 3,450 inmates. This growth was not a local diversion of travellers to Africa at the expense of other destinations, for the totals going elsewhere remain constant or even themselves increased, but they do represent an enormous growth in the numbers passing through the Shelter. Indeed the Executive Committee Minutes refer to an increase in the salary to be paid to the Superintendent 'while the present rush continues'.[38] As shown in Table 3 the number of British and Alien Migrants travelling to South Africa from British ports continued to grow. The Shelter as a conduit for alien transmigrants facilitated around one-fifth of all known South African-bound aliens.

An examination of the various Shelter records indicates that the ships named in the Registers for these inmates are invariably ships of the Union or Castle Lines (after 1900 amalgamated as the Union Castle Mail Steamship Company Limited). The Union Line had held the Royal Mail contracts between the United Kingdom and South Africa since 1858, while the Castle Line had been carrying mails either privately or under Royal Mail contract since 1876, and in contemporary advertisements they boasted that they were the only ones conveying cheap steerage and third-class passengers to Cape Town. When we look at these companies a number of interesting facts develop. Between 1891 and 1900 the Union Line ordered and brought into service no fewer than 14 new passenger ships, between them capable of carrying some 1,200 third-class passengers in addition to whatever might have been available in steerage accommodation – usually some 400 passengers each. At the same time the Castle Line brought into service 17 new ships, many of them capable of carrying between 100 and 150 third class passengers in addition to several hundred steerage passengers.[39] They came into service gradually but the orders for their construction must have been given in the late 1880s when the Board of Trade figures (as shown in Table 4) demonstrate a jump from some 7,500 passengers a year going to South Africa to over 16,000 a year. Certainly there is no doubt that despite the very strong competition between these companies neither of them would have built these ships if they did not expect to have a reasonable chance of filling them. At one stage the companies were cramming as many passengers as possible on board the ships, and one account reports that the pursers were to allocate sleeping-space for those passengers wherever they could find room.

Alien migration was a significant factor of this process, and the importance of the Shelter is demonstrated by the fact that the numbers of Shelter inmates noted as proceeding to South Africa represent between thirteen and thirty-seven percent of the total alien migration going to South Africa.[40] The increase in Jewish migrants passing through the Shelter led to a further innovation in its procedures. A resolution at the Annual General Meeting of the Shelter in February 1896 called upon the Executive to find a more effective way of keeping a note of those passing through the Shelter, and this is clearly linked to the introduction of the series of Registers still extant.[41] There had always clearly been some method of registering and analysing the flow of migration. The statistics given each year by the Shelter authorities must have been based upon some record, and indeed the Constitution had originally declared:

[40] C.L. Barker, Jewish Migration to South Africa and the Poor Jews' Temporary Shelter, London, 1880-1914 (Unpublished M.Phil. Thesis, University of Leicester, 1998). Particularly her statistical tables shown in Appendix IV.
[41] Poor Jews' Temporary Shelter, General Committee Minutes, 'Resolutions of the Annual General Meeting' held on 9 February 1896.

A register shall be kept wherein shall be made distinct entries as to the age, family, objects, origin, and pursuits of every applicant, and investigations shall, whenever possible, be made under the direction of the Committee into the correctness of the information so obtained and the merits of the individual.[42]

While Hermann Landau had regularly requested permission from the Committee to take 'the registers' away for the purpose of laying them and the information they contained before the House of Commons it is not clear whether they conformed to this pattern. In any case these early volumes seem to have disappeared completely.

While clearly these Registers were primarily intended for the ordinary purposes of the Shelter it is possible to make a number of surmises about other uses, more especially of the Supplementary volumes. During the early 1890s there was a great fear of the growth of infectious diseases. There was eventually an agreement made with the Port of London Port Sanitary Authorities that the Shelter would keep a note of all arrivals from Europe and, where they could be found, for at least a fortnight after arrival.[43] If any recent arrival fell ill from a notifiable infectious disease the medical officers would theoretically have been able to trace all those others who had travelled on the same boat. The Shelter also boasted that it met all incoming ships and that its immediate assistance was available for all those migrants who were likely to fall victim to the dockside crooks.[44] It would seem likely therefore that the 'supplementary' registers are a record of this early stage of the process, unlike the main volumes which would contain a record of all those for whom the Shelter had a financial responsibility.

The Shelter itself had two main dormitories, the beds therein being separated only by a four foot high partition and were therefore unsuitable for mixed or family accommodation. It would seem that while single males would be given a bed in the main building, others would be put out in approved lodgings for the short period of their stay. The purpose of these registers therefore would be to maintain a record where possible of those for whom a repayment could be requested from the appropriate shipping company. There is some correspondence in 1906 between the Shelter committee and various shipping companies, as well as specific entries in the Executive and General Committee Minutes.[45] These confirm the nature of these arrangements as well as the inter-dependence between the Shelter and the two companies sailing to South Africa.

[45] Poor Jews' Temporary Shelter, Letterbook, 1906. See also Committee Minutes, passim.

The closeness of the links between the Shelter, the shipping companies, and the migration of Jews of South Africa were soon to be illustrated. When in 1903 the Cape Government attempted to restrict Jewish immigration by imposing a 'European language' requirement there were large numbers of would-be migrants to South Africa whose entries in the Shelter Registers note that they needed to have their passage money refunded since they had been or would be denied permission to land at Cape Town.[46] Nor is it surprising to discover that the Union Castle Line was among those organisations prominent in the agitation that Yiddish be recognised as a 'European' language by the Cape Government.[47] When in 1906 the Shelter built new facilities next door, its Secretary wrote to the Union Castle Line:

> Kindly pardon me for taking the liberty of reminding you of your kind promise to me some time ago of a donation from Messrs Donald Currie and Co towards the Building Fund of the new Shelter. This matter has undoubtedly slipped your memory, but as we are about to open the new Shelter in the course of a few weeks and we are sorely in need of funds for furnishing the same, may we hope that Donald Currie and Co will take into consideration the good work we have done in connection with the South African emigration and furnish us with the promised donation now as it will arrive at a most opportune moment. [48]

A little later he wrote:

> The Committee rejoice to think that their efforts in looking after the transmigrants holding your tickets have met with your appreciation and they hope that the greater opportunity the new building will afford them will enable the Shelter to continue for many years to come the happy relations which have existed and now exist between this Institution and the Union Castle Line.[49]

Figure 8 (shown on previous page): Jewish Passengers bound for South Africa appearing in the Outward-bound Passenger Lists of the Board of Trade, 1909. (Copyright of The National Archives, London, BT 27/628.) This list records the personal details of Alien Passengers (Transmigrants) known to have previously stayed at the Poor Jews' Temporary Shelter in London whilst journeying from Libau to Cape Town – via London. Those recorded in this list as arriving via the United Steamship Company sailed from Libau to London on the SS Romeo (shown in Figure 3) as described in corresponding entries in the Registers of the Shelter (shown in Figure 1).

The Minutes of the Executive Committee record the regular appearance of cheques from the two companies and it is clear how important these payments were for the regular cash-flow of the Shelter. The annual reports indicate that a high proportion of the Shelter's income came from these payments. The shipping companies paid the Shelter for each person 'met and seen off' a standard sum of five shillings 25 pence in decimal currency and in addition paid one shilling and sixpence 7 pence per day for their board and lodging. This was later raised to two shillings, but Union Castle only agreed to the change after being assured that the same charge was being levied upon the other shipping companies.

Not all the passengers came with what might be termed 'standard through tickets' purchased in advance. Certainly in the early days of the contract with the Castle and Union Lines many passengers do not seem to have decided to go to South Africa until they came to London. The Registers indicate a small number of passengers going 'on their own account', while others are specifically noted as going 'second class', the implication being that the others were travelling steerage. More importantly, there were a number of individuals in the vicinity of the Shelter whose businesses depended upon their selling tickets to South Africa and changing currency for these passengers. Prominent among them were members of the Haimsohn family. In August 1893 the Minutes of the General Committee record:

> Mr H S Haimsohn of 21 Whitechapel Road, a passage agent, attended and complained that the Shelter in also acting as agent and giving the immigrants the benefit of the deductions it received as a charitable institution, interfered with his business. ... Resolved that it is desirable for the Shelter to act as Agents giving the Immigrants the benefit of any deductions or commissions received.[50]

He complained that the Shelter was undercutting his business. He claimed that the immigrants should be sent to him to change their foreign money and purchase their passage tickets instead of to anyone else. The Committee were adamant that 'no tickets should be purchased from the agents unless they could be obtained from them at the same prices as the Institution was paying the Companies direct'. Another of the family, D Haimsohn, his brother, the Reverend M Hyamsohn, and a further brother in business in Johannesburg continued to complain about the way the Committee was managing its affairs, repeatedly asking that immigrants should be sent to their firm to change money and purchase tickets. It was replied that the Committee declined to give D Haimsohn preference over the many other offices in the neighbourhood and declared that whilst the Committee had no desire to interfere with his business they were equally anxious that he should not interfere in the administration of the Shelter. Eventually the Committee had to decide to pay no more attention to him and continue as a conduit for migration and unofficial travel agency. Another body, the Russo-Jewish Committee, felt that a proportion of the commission granted by the shipping companies should be retained by the Shelter for its current expenses and the balance put into a special fund for indigent cases. The Committee, however, stuck to its guns and made it quite clear that all such payments were religiously returned to the inmates.

Between 1886 and 1914 the Shelter substantially changed the scope of its activities and the changes are best illustrated by reference to the revisions it made to its Constitution. In the revised preface issued in 1914 Hermann Landau stated:

> During recent years the work of the Shelter has been enormously increased in consequence of the Aliens Act and the regulations made there under. The Shelter also renders valuable assistance to the Immigration Authorities and to the various Steamship Companies who cater for the emigrant traffic, all of whom have from time to time expressed their great appreciation of the assistance and help given freely to them by the Shelter...
> The Committee would ... once more desire to impress upon friends and supporters of the Shelter that the objects and work of the Shelter are not and never have been to assist evasion of the regulations formed under the Aliens Act relating to immigration, or to encourage immigration into this country.[51]

And in the revised Constitution itself the objects were clearly redefined:

[51] Poor Jews' Temporary Shelter, Constitution (Revised) 1914.

The Objects of the Institution are:

(a) To meet all ships containing immigrants and transmigrants and protect them from being despoiled on the river-side and elsewhere on arrival

(b) To provide temporary accommodation for transmigrants while waiting for their ships to sail

(c) To conduct those migrants who have friends and relatives in this country to them, and if friendless to provide temporary accommodation while they are making arrangements for their future

(d) To co-operate with the Board of Trade and other public bodies for the above purposes[52]

The part played by the Shelter within the story of the growth and development of the Jewish 'Litvak' community in Southern Africa was very great. Not all those who made the journey to Cape Town passed through the Shelter. Some travelled direct from Hamburg and then re-embarked at Southampton using the ships belonging to the Castle Line; others came by ships belonging to other companies, such as the White Star Line or Shaw, Savill & Albion Line which had not established a working relationship with the Shelter; some even sailed via the much longer route direct from Hamburg to South Africa via the vessels of the Deutsche Ost-Afrika-Linie (German East Africa Line). But for the majority of those who came on 'through' tickets, they had purchased their tickets in the Pale, and travelled on steamships from Libau to London, where they were met by officials of the Shelter. And the Registers which noted their arrival, and which might well have been largely intended to facilitate an accurate accounting between the Shelter and the shipping companies, have also enabled us here to list their names and assist considerably in the reconstruction of their family histories.

In the wider understanding, the hundreds of thousands of journeys made by Jews leaving the Russian Empire at the end of the nineteenth and beginning of the twentieth centuries, the records of the Poor Jews' Temporary Shelter serve to remind demographers and historians alike that not every Jew saw the United States of America as the so-called Goldene Medinah. The provinces of South Africa, like other parts of the British Empire and South America, were also popular. As one such Litvak immigrant recalled during an interview:

They [her parents] chose South Africa because they had heard that in South Africa there was an opportunity, the golden medina ... because America was overcrowded and they heard from people who came back from America to London, that America was impossible and then they heard all the stories about South Africa.[53]

South Africa may have only received 29,751 (or 1.5 per cent) of the European transmigrants passing through Britain (between 1890 and 1911), but the peculiarities of this flow, from one part of the Pale (Kovno) to one part of the British Empire (South Africa), are still of interest a century later.[54] The fact that so many used the services of one organisation – the Poor Jews' Temporary Shelter – enables us to analyse this population flow via Shelter records when other more sizeable flows to the United States, Canada or South America, are not recorded other than in official records.

As such they do not feature in the list of names contained within this work.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE POOR JEWS' TEMPORARY SHELTER DATABASE

The database was originally created in 1987, using Ingres relational database software on the University's central VAX system (subsequently on a UNIX system). Ingres was adopted because at the time it was the only software available to us, but it proved well suited to our needs and remained the basis for our work for the next fifteen years, until 2002 when the University's Ingres service was withdrawn. The database was then converted to its present form, a SQL Server system running under Windows 2000, with user access provided via a Microsoft Access application programmed in VBA.

The database itself is of simple basic design, with just two principal tables, Persons and Moneys:

- Persons holds the great bulk of the data, including each migrant's name, date of entry to the Shelter, sex (alas, rarely clear), age, place of birth, marital status, place last from, occupation, length of stay, date of departure, place gone to, and the ships on which they arrived and left.

- Moneys is a small subsidiary table, recording the money the person is declared to have had, sometimes in several currencies, hence the need for a separate database table.

These data input tables are supplemented by a number of look-up tables, used to regularise and expand on some of the information entered:

- Occupations allows for the translation of the very variable individual occupation descriptions into standard occupation types.

- Places similarly provides for the standardisation of place-name spellings and also for the expansion of place information, e.g. by identification of the country.

- MCodes standardises currency codes, which again can be very variously written in the registers, and allows for (approximate) conversion of non-sterling amounts into sterling equivalents using contemporary exchange rates.

- Ships deals with the variant spellings of ship names.

To the above basic structure, a number of other more specialised input tables have been successively added as supplementary sources have come to light, such as South African naturalisation lists and shipping records.

Over 59,000 records have now been entered from the Shelter registers, nearly two-thirds of them by the combined efforts since the late 1980s of some 300 undergraduate students. This use of undergraduates as data inputters is an unusual feature of the database. It was motivated partly by the Department's belief that students should be given some realistic first-hand experience of the use of computers in genuine historical research, as part of their education in computer methods. At a less elevated level, the motivation has been that as a captive labour-force students come free. Until 2002, when staff changes led to the loss of historical computing as a major element in the degree programme, all History students were required to undertake a quota of data input as part of their degree work, and a mark for this contributed a small amount to their degree assessment. Despite the carrot offered by inclusion of the work in degree assessment, the effort and diligence of students naturally varied quite widely, as did their expertise. A good deal of attention therefore had to be given to quality control procedures in an effort to safeguard the consistency and accuracy of the input.

Students began by copying out their allocated set of register pages onto transcription sheets. In the early years each student could tackle some 300 entries, but in the tighter constraints of a modular syllabus the allocation was reduced to around a hundred. The transcription sheets were next checked against the originals by the project's research director, who wrote in any necessary corrections. After that students entered the corrected transcription sheets onto the computer. As they did so, validation checks built into the input screen guarded against obvious errors, such as invalid volume numbers, incorrect date patterns, or faulty capitalisation. Given the variable nature of historical data, however, the amount that could be automatically checked in this way was very limited. Every record added was tagged with a code to denote the inputter, this serving not only to identify who was responsible for the record but also as a security device to ensure that only the person who input a record could subsequently alter it. A printout of the completed input was next checked, first by the research director, who was concerned primarily with its historical accuracy, and then by the database director, who checked additionally for consistency with the database rules. The marked printout was then returned to the student for the corrections indicated to be entered. Ideally, a final scrutiny should then have checked that students had properly made the corrections required (which were often numerous), but unfortunately time did not permit that.

To guide students in their work, a detailed input manual set out the rules to be followed for each field, and advised on exceptions and difficult cases. One general problem was that presented by the frequent inconsistency of the Shelter clerks, particularly in their spelling of place names and occupations. Bessarabia, for example, might be written (or misread by the inputter) as Besarabea, Besarabia, Besarabya, Beserabia, Besserabia, etc., while a boot maker might be described as boot m, boot m., boot ma, boot mk, boot mk., boot mkr, boot' m, boot'm, bootmaker, bootmkr, bootmkr., and so on. Although at first sight it seemed desirable silently to standardise spellings and expand obvious abbreviations in the course of input, it quickly became clear that with dozens of inputters consistency would be impossible to achieve, while the attempt would also risk corrupting the data by unwitting misinterpretation. A good illustration is provided by the 'zing workers' whom we were inclined at first to transcribe as zinc workers until we realised that zinn is the German for tin, making tin workers a more likely interpretation. Our practice has therefore been to instruct inputters to enter precisely what the clerk wrote and resist any temptation to correct, expand, or otherwise interpret the data. When the database is interrogated, the look-up tables mentioned above are then employed to translate variant spellings into standard forms and probable interpretations. The look-up table for place names currently holds nearly 9,000 variant spellings (or sometimes simply misreadings or mis-typings). Another general issue concerns the transcription of poorly legible text. Inputters were here initially instructed to enclose in curly brackets any text that could not clearly be deciphered. We have found, however, that the reading of names, particularly, so frequently involves a greater or lesser degree of uncertainty that to have followed this convention rigorously would have been tedious in the extreme. In practice, therefore, the convention has been only lightly used.

It will be apparent from the above account that the input procedures followed have been cumbersome and time-consuming, while the frequent errors that continue to surface are a reminder that the checking process has been less than foolproof. It cannot be pretended that the use of undergraduate labour is an ideal way to build up a research database. On the other hand, without the more or less willing co-operation of our scores of student assistants the database would probably never have existed at all. With hindsight there are a number of ways in which the work might have been more effectively handled. In the first place, our experience has highlighted the importance of a close co-ordination between the historical and the technical aspects of the work. It has proved not to be satisfactory, for example, to treat the initial manual transcription of the data as a purely historical exercise. The transcription sheets should preferably reflect the structure of the database rather than that of the register pages, and inputters should transcribe the materials according to the input rules, rather than regarding the input as a separate exercise to be thought about later. The checking of the manual transcriptions should similarly check for consistency with the rules of the database and not just for the accuracy of the reading. Failure to observe these basic points has resulted in much erratic input finding its way into the database and has cost us much time and effort in the attempt then to eradicate it.

Above all, the supervision of the input could probably have been made much less onerous, and the results more reliable, by use of the kind of double-entry input methods that are common practice in the commercial world. By having two students independently input each set of data, a computer comparison could then have highlighted errors by pointing up differences, so relieving us of much of the labour of manually checking every detail, while at the same time more reliably catching errors that inevitably to some extent slip through even the most careful manual check. A double-entry methodology would also have enabled us easily to estimate the level of residual error remaining in the database after students had completed their work, and identify the outstanding corrections still required. A single-entry methodology leaves one uncertain in this regard, and one is faced with the daunting prospect of a complete manual check of the input before one can feel confident in the data. The value of double-entry methods with suitable historical data has been proven in another of the Department's databases, and would probably have suited the Shelter records well: while much historical material is too complex or amorphous in structure for the technique to be readily feasible, the form of the Shelter materials is relatively simple and well-defined. However, entering everything twice would obviously have slowed the growth of the database, and in the familiar conflict between quantity and quality that increasingly afflicts the academic world – exacerbated by research assessment exercises and other outside pressures – the demands of speed prevailed.

The uses of the resulting database fall into two quite distinct categories: data retrieval and data analysis. Data retrieval is simple, following the usual query-by-example methods, and is primarily useful for satisfying the curiosity of inquirers about family members. It is of relatively limited value for broader historical investigation, which calls for the considerably more sophisticated techniques of data analysis. For analytical work, therefore, we use SQL queries in SQL Server for questions of a basic nature, while for more demanding research we draw on the excellent SAS data analysis system, which besides its powerful manipulative and statistical tools also provides facilities for the graphical display of data in the form of line graphs, scatter plots, assorted charts, and all manner of complex cross-tabulations.

Among major areas of analysis that still await further development are those involving data linkage. The database presents two main kinds of linkage problem. In the first place, it is clearly interesting to study the extent to which migration was in family groups, and whether this changed over time or varied with origin or destination. To facilitate analyses of this kind, the database assigns automatic family identification numbers: all the migrants entering the Shelter on the same day, sharing the same surname, and whose names follow each other directly in the register, are assumed to form a family group and are each assigned the same FamId number. This then allows investigation of the proportion of migrants who travelled in groups, the frequency of different group sizes, the typical composition of groups, etc. Preliminary results indicate that over a third of the migrants bound for South Africa were travelling in such groups. A second and more difficult kind of linkage problem is to identify cases where the same individual occurs in the database more than once, as a result of having figured in more than one source. This applies most notably to the series of supplementary registers, whose coverage extensively overlaps the main series, but with some variation in the information given. Establishing links in such cases is complicated by differences in the spelling of surnames, and by the fact that the supplementary registers record forenames whereas the main registers for the most part give only initials. The extensive string manipulation functions available in SQL and SAS, together with the soundex search facilities in SAS, offer promising tools for tackling such questions, but reliable progress in this direction must await completion and further correction of the database. Similar issues arise in the establishment of links between Shelter records and other sources, such as South African naturalisation lists.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE SOUTHERN AFRICA JEWISH ROOTSBANK DATABASE

The Centre for Jewish Migration and Genealogy Studies was an initiative conceived by Mendel Kaplan and falls under the umbrella of the Isaac and Jessie Kaplan Centre for Jewish Studies and Research at the University of Cape Town. The objectives are to map the entire history of Jewish migration to South Africa and to integrate this data into a comprehensive database. The primary aim of the project is to research the estimated 15,000 core families who migrated to Southern Africa between approximately 1850-1950 from modern-day Lithuania, Latvia and Belarus. The smaller numbers who came from England, Germany and other areas will also be considered. In broad terms the research focuses on the locations where families originated, patterns of migration to South Africa, where families first settled, communities they established, growth of families, and subsequent movements and emigration. Sources utilised include those of passenger arrival lists, naturalization lists, communal records, records of marriages, births and deaths, burial records, military service records and family trees.

The shortcomings of the Poor Jews' Temporary Shelter Database, namely the periods for which known registers remain missing, became particularly apparent when the Southern Africa Jewish Rootsbank Database was being developed.[1] It was evident that some individuals featured in the Rootsbank Database did not appear in the Poor Jews Temporary Shelter Database even though evidence suggested they had passed through the Shelter. Although the dates of the 'missing' registers are known, and despite appeals by Professor Newman, no further registers have been found in Britain. The two-way process of the Jewish Migration and Genealogy Project distinguishes it from other previous research projects that were solely British-origin or South African-origin studies of migration. During the development of the Rootsbank Database an additional list of names of emigrants bound for South Africa who passed through the Poor Jews' Temporary Shelter came to light within the archives of the South African Jewish Board of Deputies.[2] The typed lists (detailed in Figure 10) differed from the original records gathered in London and only provided details such as the date of departure from and the length of stay at the Shelter, their Trade and Ship Out.

The lists covered the period between 6 January 1905 and 13 September 1914. They have all been transcribed and entered into a Microsoft Excel database by Project Assistant Marc Blumberg. The process of data-entry by a single individual was in marked contrast from the data-entry for the original Poor Jews' Temporary Shelter Database. The methodology reduced the risks of inconsistencies and the accuracy was further assured by the fact that the original source was typed. Information captured from this additional list supplemented information obtained from the main Shelter Registers and pivotally detailed migrants who had travelled to South Africa via the Shelter between 35 June 1905-29 November 1907 and 27 November 1911-31 July 1913 (for which the original Registers have not survived). It is not known who compiled this list, but it is possible they were compiled by historian Gustav Saron as some of his research appears to be based on these records.[3]

Generally the typed lists only noted the names of heads of families. The names of wives and children, along with their ages, were not gathered. In total the details of 5,871 emigrants passing through the Poor Jew's Temporary Shelter between 1905 and 1914 were retained by the Board. Excluding ship names all spellings and other information remains as it was presented within the original source. In due course further records relating to later periods of immigration via the Shelter – covering from 1920 onwards – along with other datasets will be added to the Rootsbank Database to create a single comprehensive databank from which further studies into the unique Litvak origins of South African Jewry can be profiled.

Figure 10. South Africa Jewish Board of Deputies, Jews' Temporary Shelter London – Emigrants for South Africa who passed through the Shelter, 13 October 1911-17 November 1911. (Copyright of the South African Jewish Board of Deputies.) The typed list (shown on the next page) details Jewish passengers who arrived in South Africa who had previously stayed at the Poor Jews' Temporary Shelter in London en route to Cape Town. The lists, now held within the archives of the South African Jewish Board of Deputies, supplement information contained within the Shelter's own archives, and provide information on who stayed in the Shelter during periods for which the original registers have not survived.

Appendix I – List of the various Shelter Registers

For the period up to the outbreak of the First World War eighteen volumes of registers, twelve in the 'main' series and six in the 'supplementary' series are known to have survived. The volume numbers shown below were at some time allocated by the Secretary of the Shelter and they are used in both the online database of all those appearing in the Shelter Registers and by the London Metropolitan Archives (where the original registers are held).

Main Registers

1.	29 May 1896	-	9 July 1897
2.	12 July 1897	-	21 April 1899
3.	21 April 1899	-	28 June 1900
4.	29 June 1900	-	31 October 1901
5.	1 November 1901	-	19 December 1902
6.	19 December 1902	-	30 October 1903
8.	14 August 1904	-	26 December 1904
9.	27 December 1904	-	23 June 1905
10.	29 November 1907	-	28 September 1909
11.	28 September 1909	-	5 September 1910
12.	5 September 1910	-	27 November 1911
13.	31 July 1913	-	11 September 1914

One volume, originally labelled by Shelter Authorities as Volume 7 (and covering the dates 1 November 1903-30 October 1904) partially duplicates what is found in Supplementary Volume 2a. It has now been re-labelled Supplementary Volume 2b (as shown below).

Supplementary Registers

2a.	1 November 1897	-	13 December 1898
2b.	1 November 1897	-	30 October 1898
3a.	13 December 1898	-	1 December 1899
4a.	1 December 1899	-	7 July 1900
5a.	1 July 1902	-	10 October 1902
6a.	1 January 1903	-	24 February 1903

Day Book

9 December 1909 - 28 May 1910

This book records the details of over 24,000 Jews who emigrated from Imperial Russia to South Africa between 1896 and 1914. Rather than journeying to the United States, like so many of their co-religionists, many migrated to South Africa and in particular Cape Town and Johannesburg in such large scale numbers that South African Jewry is still of a predominantly Litvak origin. Based upon the previously unused records of the Poor Jews' Temporary Shelter of London, this volume looks at the personal details recorded by the London-based charity in assisting Jews to migrate to South Africa after 1896. The existence of the database to which this volume represents an introduction will in itself enable closer analysis of the demographic profile of this migration.
