SOVIET JEWRY

This special reference section on Soviet Jewish Refuseniks pays tribute to the individual heroism of the thousands of Soviet Jews who have been denied their basic human rights. Highlighted are a sampling of the names, faces and details of Refuseniks whose "crime" is their desire to practice their religion and to emigrate. Four groups have been chosen for special attention: Long-Term Refuseniks, Prisoners of Conscience, Former Prisoners of Conscience still not allowed to emigrate and Soviet scientists awaiting permission.

We are very grateful to Myrna Shinbaum and the National Conference on Soviet Jewry for their guidance in all phases of this endeavor. We also acknowledge the assistance of the Baltimore Jewish Council, the efforts of the Los Angeles Jewish Community Relations Council, photographer Bill Aron and also Jacob Birnbaum, who assisted in the research and compiled the list of Soviet Jewish scientists.

Professor Martin Gilbert, noted author, historian and Soviet Jewry activist, has written an introduction on the plight of Soviet Jews. We are proud to present his essay on the following page.

SOVIET JEWRY

Ten years ago a shocking fact reached the West from the Soviet Union: that there were as many as five hundred Jewish families who had been refused their exit visas. This information reached London, New York and Israel during 1976 in a series of lists typed on flimsy paper. (I have a set of them in front of me as I write these words.) The lists, which give the names and addresses of those "in refusal," were compiled by a number of Soviet Jews, among them Dr. Alexander Lunts and Dina Beilina, both of whom now live in Israel. The lists achieved public prominence in 1977, when Anatoly Shcharansky was accused of being their principal compiler. He too is now in Israel.

Since 1978, other brave Soviet Jews have continued to send lists of refuseniks to the West. Today, we know that more than twelve thousand Jews have been refused their exit visas (a 24-fold increase over 1976). The gates of emigration, through which 250,000 Jews passed in the "miracle" decade of the 1970s are, to all intents and purposes, now closed. They are particularly harshly shut against those Jews who have been refuseniks longest, including more than a hundred of those whose names appear on the original lists of 1976. It is these long-term refuseniks, many of whom I met in the Soviet Union in March 1983 and again in August 1985, whose struggle to emigrate has led to a series of arrests, trials and imprisonments, as well as constant harassment and isolation.

As I write these words, twenty Soviet Jews are in prison or labor camp for their part in the struggle for emigration. These include Dr. Iosif Begun, sentenced in October 1983 (after almost a year in prison awaiting trial) to twelve years. This was Dr. Begun's third sentence in less than a decade. Among the other prisoners are several Hebrew teachers, including Ari Volvovsky from Gorky and Alec Zelichenok from Leningrad, both sentenced to three years in labor camp.

Anatoly Shcharansky, whose release from prison in February 1986 delighted not only Soviet Jewry campaigners but the whole Western world, was fortunate that throughout his nine years in prison and labor camp his wife Avital campaigned tirelessly for him throughout the free world. Unfortunately, not one of the other prisoners has a wife in the West to wage such a struggle for him. Each must therefore depend entirely upon the good will, energy and initiative of ordinary men and women around the world.

The morale of many of the Jewish prisoners is sustained by their wives who, while still inside the Soviet Union, do their utmost to inform the West of their plight: by letter, through telephone calls and through visitors. Few things are more important, as a practical measure of support, than for Western Jews — writers, teachers, attorneys, community leaders — to go to the Soviet Union and meet the wives of Jews who are in prison. How vividly I recall my own meetings with Dr. Begun's wife, Ina; with Ari Volvovsky's wife, Mila; and with Alec Zelichenok's wife, Galina. These three women deserve, as does every prisoner's wife and family, all the support the West can give, either by visiting them in the Soviet Union or by campaigning for them on Capitol Hill or in London's Whitehall, Paris's Quai d'Orsay and in Jerusalem's Hakirya.

As well as the twenty prisoners, there are more than twenty former prisoners who, although their sentences are over, are still refused exit visas. These include Vladimir Slepak, one of the longest of the long-term refuseniks; Ida Nudel, who for almost a decade struggled to alert the world to the plight of all imprisoned Jews; and Dr. Victor Brailovsky, one of the leaders of the refusenik scientific seminar which served as one of the main centers of Jewish cultural identity in Moscow a decade ago. Anatoly Shcharansky mentioned each of these during his address to Solidarity Sunday in New York on May 11, 1986; his concern is widely echoed. It is essential to name the names of those who suffer and (as Who's Who in World Jewry is doing), by naming them, to prevent them from being forgotten. Only by public concern, openly expressed, can we sustain the momentum of diplomatic contacts and secret negotiations and thus help the refuseniks to their goal. That goal is clear: not only the traditional "Next Year in Jerusalem" but, as many Soviet Jews express it (echoing Shcharansky's words ten years ago and Slepak's words today): "This Year in Jerusalem."

It is inspiring to see how those Soviet Jews who have sought to emigrate form among themselves such a dedicated band of brothers and sisters. Theirs is not a selfish struggle but a common one. They rejoice in the few successes (all too few at the moment) and look to us in the West to procure something better for them in the future. Their need is desperate now. So few long-term refuseniks have been released in the past few years that, on any statistical plan, it would take many hundreds of years before exit visas were granted to most of those who remain — a time span which is not even anticipated by the age-old Jewish wish: "Until 120." (Not always recalled when making this wish is that this ideal age span was the age of Moses when he died; bitterly ironic, too, in the Soviet Jewry context, as Moses never entered the Promised Land, but could only see it from afar.)

The several hundred Jews who have been waiting twelve years and even more for exit visas have watched, at times with despair, as the passing of the years has inevitably reduced the time and energy they wished to give to the land of Israel. Forced at the moment of applying for their exit visas to leave their professions in the Soviet Union, they have not only been denied their visas, but also their wish to contribute, while still young, to life in the Jewish State. In March 1983, I myself was impressed by the way so many long-term refuseniks had retained their hope of an exit visa. But when I returned in August 1985, one of those whose hopes had so impressed me earlier remarked: "The hope which you ascribe to us is very tenuous now."

Only the renewed efforts of Jews in the Western world, and the help of all those who believe in human rights, can renew that hope. The Soviet Jewry campaigners in the West are as active as ever. But they need the vocal and sustained support of all those who see the basic unfairness, and indeed cruelty, of denying men and women their right (so firmly established in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights in 1948 and confirmed by the Soviet Union itself in the Helsinki Agreements of 1975) that: "Everyone shall be free to leave any country, including his own. . . ."
